DO YOU KNOW!
THAT the limitations of the present monetary system makes it impossible to develop and expand our own natural resources as outlay are needed?
THAT there are no real surpluses of consumer goods in the world today?
THAT it would be the policy of a Social Credit government to inaugurate a two-price system for wheat under which producers would be assured a fair minimum price for that portion of their production absorbed by the domestic market with the balance to be sold on the world market at prevailing competitive prices
THAT a Social Credit government would strive for mutually advantageous trade agreements with other nations based on absolute integrity and honesty of dealing.

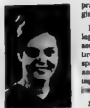
The Homemaker



By Miss Irene Eby, Your District Home Economist

SIXTH OF A SERIES ON "MONEY MANAGEMENT"

YOUR HOME FURNISHING DOLLAR

This will be dealt with in five areas.

1. Use a personal approach to meet individual and family needs and wants

2. Understand good design to form a sound basis for your decorating plan.

3. Arrange furniture to provide convenience, comfort and beauty.

4. Manage your expenses to fit your spending plan.

5. Follow buying guides to find quality and suitability in home furnishings purchases.

USE A PERSONAL APPROACH

The most important purpose in planning a home is to provide a pleasant, comfortable atmosphere suited to the people who live in it. Only you and your family can decide what you want your home to be.

Consider what a home means to you. Is it your castle or an address? Consider the way you live. Are you casual and informal or sophisticated and formal? Your living pattern will affect your choice of furnishings.

Make furnishing your home a family affair. Enjoy working together as a family group. If you let each person take an active interest in selecting furnishings and working on projects for the home you can develop a well designed home, suited to your living pattern and in this way educate your children.

To use the personal approach consider:

a. Your place in the life cycle
b Your interests and activities.
c Your tastes and preferences.
d Your special requirements.
a. Your place in the life cycle.

Personal and family living passes through several basic stages in the life cycle Needs and interests change as individuals and families move from one stage of living to the next. You will be wise to design your home to allow for future adjustments and changing circumstances as well as to meet present needs.

Newly married couples may begin their life together in a small apartment or house. If you are at this happy place in the life cycle, work out your decorating plan together. Consider what useable furnishings either of you have from previous living quarters; what additions! items are needed; what must be purchased immediately and what can be added in the future; which of your purchases will be temporary and which will be used for many years; what you both like and what you must compromise; how much can be spent, how purchases will fit into your family spending plan.

Beginning families start with the first baby who changes everything —your living pattern, space requirements, expenses, home furnishing needs. You will need a place for the baby to eat, sleep, grow and play as well as space for you to relax and to entertain friends.

Families with young children need space to expand. Children must have room to run and play, to make noise, to be outdoors, to practice music, to paint or to begin hobbies.

Families with adolescent and college age children find home a source of pride and joy for the entire family. Young people need space for reading, enjoying hobbies and being alone as well as for taking part in family activities and entertaining.

Senior citizens will find home furnishing needs less demanding. With children having flown the nest space and furniture needs are reduced. Parents may want to plan space and facilities for sons and daughters to visit home—or, they may wish to consider moving to a more compact home—to plan living on one floor to eliminate climbing steps—to look for furnishings that are easy to maintain.

b. Your Interests and Activities

Plan suitable space, facilities and furnishings for your activities and interests—eating and food preparation—housekeeping and work—sleeping and dressing—conversation and relaxation—recreation and entertaining. Consider how each room will be used and furnish it accordingly. Plan for the activities in each room

c. Your Tastes and Preferences

You will want your home to reflect personal tastes and preferences. Decide what atmosphere you want in your home. If there are special interests such as painting, music, gardening or books, you may wish to bring these into your decorating plan.

d. Your Special Requirements

Do you move frequently? Then you need furnishings and colour schemes that adapt easily. Or do you need space for hobbies or work done in the home? Do you have pets? Do you entertain frequently? Consider your special needs and include them in your decorating plans.

"Canada's greatest need today is responsible representation in Ottawa, to provide leadership in domestic and international policies. SOCIAL CREDIT policies mean progress - just look at Alberta!"

The achievement of responsible representation will require an entirely new political approach on the part of all Canadians who care about their country and its needs. This approach is to be found in the principles advocated by the Social Credit party, successfully proven in Alberta, and readily adaptable to Ottawa.

Regular Meeting Of MD

A regular meeting of the Council of the M. D. of Flagstaff was held for the month of October, at the Board Room in Sedgewick, with all members of the council and the secretary present. The minutes of the September meeting, and the financial report were adopted as presented.

Reeve Matthews reported on the gravel crushing program being carried on at the Leslie Ball farm. He stated that there was a good quantity of gravel on the pit now, or will be hired to assist in loading operations and stockpiling.

The Reeve also reported on the Seminar held in Edmonton, and the Rural Road study recommended by the Provincial Government.

Mr. Weir, consulting engineer, met with the council to discuss the rural road inventory, and a map prepared for this purpose was considered by the council. Mr. Weir considered that Flagstaff, Wainwright, Provost and Beaver would be a logical group to study the road plan. The plan would cost each Municipality from 5 to 6 thousand dollars of which the Provincial Government would pay half.

At 2:15 p.m. the Council met with the Farm Purchase Advisory Board to hear the application of Kenneth Zimmer to purchase the East half of 8-45-15 for the total purchase price of $32,000, with a twenty percent down payment. The application was approved.

Meeting again as a Council, the members were interviewed by Mr. Lee, Field Supervisor, who asked if the council would be interested in having the cut out of road intersections under the Winter Works program. After some discussion, it was decided to apply to have this done under the program.

Accounts and payments as presented were approved for payment.

L. C. Graham, road foreman, met with council and reported on the 1966 roads program to date. He indicated that it would take from 3 to 4 weeks to complete the year's program.

A. E. White head reported that the D7 tractor working in the gravel pit required some new parts, which would take a day to install. It was agreed that the repairs be made.

Permission was given for the laying of a 3-inch pipeline under the roadway between sections 21 and 22 in Township 41, provided the line was laid according to plans.

Coun. Koehli reported on the conversion of the office, house and shop to natural gas had been completed and that everything appeared to be working satisfactorily.

A letter from the president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, invited Coun. Koehli to be a member of a panel at the 1966 convention.

Preliminary route maps were received, showing the proposed power line construction of Canadian Utilities, to serve members of the R. E. A. at Forestburg. Authorization to proceed was approved.

Reeve reported that he and councillors Scandman and Blatz had met with the Hon. Raymond Rierson to discuss their complaints with the laying of underground telephone cable on Municipal road allowances. The Minister had given them a very good hearing, and stated that a conference would be held in December to attempt to correct the difficulties. A committee was set up to meet with the Minister.

A letter from the Flagstaff-Beaver Auto Hospital Board was informed that the term of Mr. Alfred Rands on the board expired October 31st, and requested that he be appointed for a further two year term. It was approved that Mr. Rands be re-appointed as requested.

A request from Henry Kalndorfer on behalf of Killam Feed and Farm Supply was approved without objection for a license to operate a Hardware, Grain Storage Equipment, Veterinary and Livestock Supplies, provided it was operated in accordance with the rules and regulations laid down by the Provincial Government.

The report of Constable Vanderwoude for the month of September was received and accepted.

Polls, enumerators, deputy returning officers and poll clerks for the year 1965 elections were approved by motion.

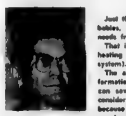
Time For A Change



By Bert Odland

Just the same as political offices and bodies, there is another thing that needs frequent changes.

That is the air filter in a forced air heating system (or air conditioning system).

The above is just a little bit of information I'm passing along to you. It can save you discomfort, money and considerable gnashing of teeth . . . because clogged furnace filters are the one largest cause of service calls.

You see, when furnace filters become choked with dust, only a very small amount of air can get through. The furnace blower will run and run, but very little air will be pushed through the registers. And because so little air is going through the furnace, it overheats and the safety control shuts off the burner. Result: you get cold. That's why I say again: change those filters . . . or at least clean the old ones. Filters can be taken out and some of the dust tapped out of them. This will keep them going a while longer, but new filters should be put in twice during the heating season. It's easy to do yourself, and they are inexpensive. Our shop has all sizes. Never be ashamed of dirty filters. That merely means the system is doing its job of picking up, heating and recirculating the air. All air has dust in it. And it's better to have that dust in the filter than bouncing around the house. That's why Lennox puts oversize filters in its furnaces.

Another tip: don't operate a forced air furnace without filters . . . the dust then collects inside the furnace and ducts. If you have any questions, just call us at

NATURAL GAS SYSTEM OPENED

TAKE YOUR PICK—Here are the four candidates running in the Nov. 8th Federal Election, one of whom will represent you in the next Parliament. From the left is Mr. Yorsa, Liberal; Mr. Small-wood, Conservative; Mr. Barber, Social Credit; and Mr. Arntson, NDP; as they appeared at the recent FUA Political Forum.

In an unusual and in fact unique ceremony of "Lighting of the Flares," last Monday night, officially opened what is now commonly know as the X and X Natural Gas System While the citizens of Killam and Sedgewick have been using natural gas for some weeks, November 1st marked a red letter day in the efforts of the communities to make use of this great natural resource in which the Province is so rich. The system, jointly owned and operated by the two towns brings to reality some twenty years of concerted effort by the two municipalities. It has been confirmed that the system is the only such project of its kind in Western Canada, and the owners feel justly proud of the accomplishment.

To celebrate the occasion a joint grand opening was sponsored at which a large percentage of the citizens took an enthusiastic part. A social hour was held at Killam, followed by a banquet and the lighting of the flare The joyous crowd then crowded the highway to Sedgewick where a flare lighting ceremony was repeated, followed by a social and public dance.

The banquet M. C'd. by Eddie" Fee was graced by the presence of representatives from Canpipe Pipelines, Palmer Engineering, Shaw Construction. Mayors of both towns along with ex-Mayors and Councillors, and the feature speaker, the Hon. Russell Patrick of the Provincial Government, who was introduced by Mr. Jack Hillman, M.L.A. Greetings were brought by Mayor Gordon Hilker, and congratulations from Palmer Engineering, Canpipe Pipelines, Shaw Construction responsible for the installation of the system. Mayor Hilker paid a tribute to the ratepayers who had voted so overwhelmingly in favor of the project. H. W. Smith, retired Mayor of Sedgewick, praised the co-operation as evident between the two towns throughout the entire two years of effort to conclude the system.

The Hon. Russel Patrick, Minister of Mines and Minerals, and featured speaker of the evening, commented on the uniqueness of the system and paid tribute to the two communities on being northern 301 and 304 among the municipalities now served by natural gas. He recalled that he could remember when only three or four of the small communities were then served, and wished this new enterprise every success.

At Killam's new sports centre, Mr. Roy Manning on behalf of the Board of Trade, welcomed the citizens and thanked them for their co-operation. Other speakers were Bruce Palmer and the Hon. Russell Patrick. Mr. Arnold Saxmiers spoke for the Town Council and called upon Mayor Hilker to light the flare, which burst into flame amid joyous shouting, hand clapping and tooting of car horns.

Small Crowd Attends FUA Political Forum

SEDGEWICK—A meagre crowd of only 57 attended the political forum arranged at Sedgewick for last Thursday evening, bearing out the fact that there is much apathy among Canadians regarding the Nov. 8th election.

All four of the candidates were present and each was given a space of time to present his and his party's views. To wind up the affair, each was allowed a five-minute re-buttal period, following which a question and answer session was held.

Mr. Hal Yorsa, Liberal, started things off, and in his address put emphasis on such items as farm loans, farm machinery credit groups, crop insurance program. On the latter, he explained to be widened with 25% being paid federally. The Federal and Provincial governments would share the administration costs.

Mr. Cliff Smallwood, P. C. stressed advances to farmers for farm stored grain, acreage payments, and other matters strictly of interest to the agricultural sphere. Mr. Smallwood stated that the present buoyant economy was due strictly to legislation passed by the Conservative government.

Mr Barber, S. C., said that he was fearful of either of the old line parties getting a majority, for Pearson was too lenient and Diefenbaker was a dictator. He said he didn't think either was good for the country. Mr. Barber said one of the solutions to agricultural problems was the two-price system, which we must have to survive. He questioned free education, as we at present do not have enough Universities, teachers or professors. The same applied to Medicare, he said, for at present we have neither the hospital facilities or the doctors to cope with it.

Mr. Alf Arntson, N.D.P., said the agricultural problem is not one of selling, but in world competition farmers will have to accept the price of the day. He deplored the fact that farmers are making little money and even losing, while in-

HALLOWE'EN DRESS — Last Saturday was Hallowe'en, an occasion for both young and old to dream up some fancy costume and celebrate. In most of the schools the lower grades held parties and these three agreed to show off their costumes for us. Hallowe'en this year was relatively quiet and little property damage resulted from the festivities.

2 Hockey Leagues For Young Boys

This winter a new five town hockey league for Bantam and Pee-Wee teams will be operated on a one game per week schedule.

At the recent annual meeting of the Sedgewick Minor Hockey Association it was decided to enter the new league which will have teams from Sedgewick, Lougheed, Hardisty, Hughenden, and Czar. The Bantams will have boys fourteen years and under while the Pee-Wees will have boys twelve years and under. Each team will play once a week, the Bantams on Friday evening and the Pee Wees on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Les Berg was elected as President for the new year. Ian Burden as Vice-President, Maurice Hampshire as Sec-Treas., Dick Matthews is the new Equipment Manager, and Pete Myrnhaug is in charge of Publicity.

There will be seven or eight hockey teams operating this winter under the auspices of the Minor Hockey Association and coaches and managers have been appointed for the teams made up of the older age groups. Coaches for the House League teams will be named later.

Also set up at the meeting was an ice committee to look after preparing the arena and making the ice.

Two Local People Die In Accidents

Mr. Kenneth J. Ekeberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Ekeberg of Lougheed, has just been announced as the winner of a fifty dollar Dominion Glass Company Scholarship for Mechanical Technology at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology in Calgary. Kenneth attended school in Lougheed and Sedgewick.

Two local accidental deaths added to Alberta's growing traffic fatality list during the past week as a Hardisty district man and a Hardisty youth met death in separate road mishaps.

Mr. Bob McCormick died as a result of injuries received in an accident with a bread delivery truck. The accident took place near Rosyth, and at time of writing the actual cause of the accident is not known.

Another tragic accident in the Town of Hardisty took the life of young Brain Lloyd, son of Mr. and Mrs Jack Lloyd. Brian was employed by the Dick Gillespie Department Store as delivery boy. He was making deliveries when he fell from his scooter bike in the path of a large tank truck, which passed over him, killing him instantly.

Rams Finish Second; Had Their Best Year

Central High Rams meet Wetaskiwin this Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. at Camrose in the first game of the playoffs.

Rams lost to Camrose Composite by a score of 7 to 2 last weekend and finished the league in second place.

If the Rams can win this Saturday they will meet the other semi-final winner the next week to decide the league champion.

Last weekend's game was hampered by a 25 mph wind which ruined the kicking and passing of both teams and neither squad could move the ball consistently on the ground. On several occasions the Rams zoomed about to go over for a TD but something always halted the drive short of the goal-line

The cold windy weather also kept many people away from the last home game of the season.

The Community Press

"Independent, But Not Necessarily Neutral, In The Public Service"

Established on July 16th, Nineteen Hundred and Eight

Newspaper Community Service!

Newspapers lead fights for better schools, improved streets, roads and sidewalks, more hospital facilities, better government, more participation by citizens in their government, etc. Where a community is progressive and in tune with its population growth, you can be sure there is at least one aggressive newspaper at work in the area. Newspapers lend their columns and their support for community programs, charity drives, and annual events of all kinds that move the community a notch ahead.

My organization works in the area of community service. Why can't we get anything in the newspaper?

Perhaps you go about it the wrong way. First, learn the needs of the local newspaper and how it wants news prepared. Know when its deadlines are and which editors or reporters to contact. Visit the newspaper office and discuss your problem and what you are trying to do. Oft times the organizations that yell the loudest about not being able to get any news in the newspaper either (1) have never sent a representative to the newspaper office, or (2) never do anything that is newsworthy. You've got to make news first before you can get it printed.

I belong to a public service civic club. Why can't we get our club meeting story in the paper each week?

A newspaper has just so much space each week to fill with news. There is a lot of competition for that space. The editors must think of every reader in the community and not just the members of your club. When local clubs have a newsworthy meeting, you can get the story in the paper. This is true of all clubs, not just yours. The answer to your question is: Have better, more newsworthy meetings, with good speakers, and you'll get more local publicity.

Are newspapers really concerned about public service?

Yes, they are. This is their business—as well as their responsibility and their privilege. Individual newspapers and provincial and national newspaper groups have adopted codes or standards accepting their responsibility to serve the communities in which they publish. This is a privilege and a responsibility that they cherish and guard zealously.

Let People Know!

From some areas has come criticism of the Alberta Government on its present policy of letting the people know what it is doing, and what it proposed to do. This is being done partly through advertisements placed in the Alberta press, partly by releases of a news nature and partly by means of the air waves.

In spite of the criticism, we think this procedure is sound policy and should be continued, for it is part of a government's duty to keep the public informed on what it is doing. This is the only way they can be informed.

But there is another area in which people need information and that is changes in the law. We know that pending ignorance is no excuse acceptable by authorities,, and yet there is an area of excuse when a law is altered and the proper information on it is not properly disclosed to those affected by it. The Alberta Government may well consider a means of properly informing the public on all changes of laws and statutes in a manner that will bring it before the citizens. It is never a waste of money to dispense information and it is a wise government which does just that.

Nothing To Be Smug About!

We Canadians are apt to feel a bit smug when we read about race rights in the U. S. and as we watch TV shots of violence and brutality. "Thank goodness that doesn't happen here", we say. It's a safe bet that only the absence of a large colored population keeps our hands clean but move ahead a couple hundred years and it's surprising how much prejudice of one sort and another you will find.

While many Indian students have been integrated into the town schools near reservations they often get second-class treatment., because it seems suitable for an Indian. Our Jewish minority has its problems too. While there are citizens in Canada who feel alien and unwanted because of race or creed we'd better not sit in judgement on our neighbors to the south.

Indian Chief! Huh!

That old Indian Chief from down Rocky Mountain way has no hesitation in making predictions on the weather. Sometime he's bound to hit it right, just as any constant player is sure to win at sometime or other.

But the old boy kind of lost his bearings on his prediction as to our fall weather. Now on the other hand, we predicted some time ago that we would get a lot of good weather before winter, that the crops would be harvested and the work all done this fall. We batted 1000 in the amateur weather league. We also predicted a wearisome and non-sensical political campaign for the Nov. 8th election, and again we hit 1000. Now that it's too late to influence the results we try again for the top, and predict a Liberal majority on November 8th.

The Letter Box

Nov. 29, 1965

Dear Editor,

This is a letter of CRITICISM regarding the F.U.A. forum held at Sedgewick on Nov. 28. Not that the meeting was a failure though because it was excellent. However in a campaign where men are more the position than the national issues, only a handful turned out to hear and question the candidates. WHY ?

First the local F.U.A. should take part of the blame for it was a very poorly advertised meeting. Two small notices well hidden among others was the total. What about banner-lines? Radio advertising? Surely a vital and important meeting like this deserves the best promotion.

Secondly the Community Press was negligent in its service to the public. Surely a front-page news item would be in order during this functioning of democracy, or perhaps a "women's meeting" was more newsworthy.

Thirdly and more important, MOST people in this community are apathetic towards politics. To them, democracy has no real meaning. If elections are so meaningless and issues so unimportant, maybe they would appreciate dictatorship or communism. There one is not bothered with elections.

Fourthly people in this community have already made up there minds on how they are going to vote. Don't thought. They vote for "X" because they have always voted for or because their parents voted for "X", or because "X" is most likely to win (and always votes for a winner), or because "X" has bribed them (this happens when "X" wins). Whatever reason is due to him or wheat trades are due to him (what he has nothing to do with them). This is why Canada is facing grave problems today.

Finally, MANY people are afraid of forums. They might find out they are wrong (and no one likes to be wrong). Or their candidate might not be as good as he suspected. Or another candidate might show him up.

Are you APATHETIC? THOUGHTLESS? BEMUSED? or AFRAID? If not, why were you NOT at the F.U.A. forum?

DISCUSTED

Wooing The 'Undecideds'

by Ray Argyle

Canada's voters watched and waited this week, as leaders of the national parties hopped from Montreal to Vancouver in a flurry of campaign-closing rallies to the big cities.

The last week of electioneering, always considered vital in Canadian campaigns, was aimed at the "undecided" voter whose final choice would tip the scales either way next Monday.

According to opinion polls, the Liberals continues to hold a clear edge over the Conservatives on a national basis. If past performance is any indication, the undecided voters will again split about the same way as those who have already made up their minds.

This could give the Liberals up to 40 per cent of the vote, spelling a shattering defeat for Conservative leader John Diefenbaker.

But if Liberal strength is top-heavy in one province — such as Quebec — the same could be the election in ridings throughout the rest of the country could present quite a different picture from the national samplings of the opinion polls.

The strongest single issue the Liberals have going for them — majority government — surfaced in the closing days of the campaign, colliding even Mr. Diefenbaker in its tide.

After making his third visit of the campaign in Quebec last week, the former Tory prime minister predicted he would be back in office after Nov. 8. But the best he could hope for, he said, was a minority administration — he didn't expect to get a majority.

Prime Minister Pearson, in contrast, built up the majority government theme to give it equal prominence to the need for national unity. Only a federal government with a majority in the House of Commons, he said, could keep the country united while dealing fairly with the provinces.

Despite many signs of voter apathy, such as 350,000 fewer registered voters than 1963, it was still anybody's guess how many would turn up at the polls. Many voters talked of staying home in protest, which could amount to a virtual voter's strike if a large segment of the electorate took this course.

Mr. Diefenbaker has worked the morality in government issue so far all it is worth. Some observers feel it has been overworked it, and that so many unproven charges have been leveled that the tactic has back-fired on the Conservatives.

The Tory attack on Mr. Pearson has been so scathing that the Conservative party's own platform — which contains many enticing items — has been shoved aside. Tory promises of a $100 per month old age pension, and deduction of municipal taxes up to $300 from taxable income have strong appeal to many voters, but they didn't get many [illegible]

As the returns begin to come in Monday night, it is unlikely that a trend will emerge until the Quebec ridings start reporting. The seats in that province are now held by René Casuntte's Creditistes. If they can hang on, Liberal hopes for a majority will be blunted before many ballots are even counted.

The Toronto returns will give a clue to the success of the NDP among big city voters. In rural Ontario, the Conservatives hope to recapture many Liberal seats and if they do so they will also be able to hold the West. But if the Liberals can keep the Tories in check in Ontario, they'll have won their majority.

On the basis of my checks across the country, there appears to me to be a trend toward the Liberals, and that the Liberals. Barring any dramatic new developments in the campaign, I think that Mr. Pearson is going to return to Ottawa with at least 148 of the 265 House of Commons seats. The balance should be split up some thing like 87 for the Tories, 21 for NDP and 9 split for the Socreds and Creditistes. This will give Mr. Pearson the majority he says he needs to govern the country.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Canada: A Middle Power

OTTAWA—What do politicians or historians mean when they speak of Canada as a "Middle Power"?

It could mean that we lie between the two greatest powers on earth, the United States on our southern border and the Soviet Union on our northern. It could also mean (often correctly) that Canada tends to occupy a middle road in foreign policy, and to prefer herself on a gift for compromise and conciliation. As a matter of historical fact, however, the phrase was first used to describe Canada's status among the nations of the world, not a great power like the United States, Great Britain or the USSR, but [illegible] greater in military and economic strength than such other sovereign nations as, for example, Costa Rica or Jordan or Iceland.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King developed this thesis in the last year of Wrd War I, when plans were being laid for the postwar organization which was to be the successor of the League of Nations During his visit to Britain just before D-Day in 1944, Mr. King was dismayed to learn that Prime Minister Churchill, President Roosevelt and Premier Josef Stalin were all contemplating an organization in which the three great powers (later expanded to five by the inclusion of France and China) would make all the important decisions, while the lesser nations of the world would be heaped together in a kind of indiscriminate rabble, to be lectured at the great powers' decisions but not really to be consulted about them. Mr. King's reaction to this proposal was immediate. He did not like it. He though the smaller countries should have a real share in the decision-making process. He also thought, and soon took occasion to say, that countries like Canada which had made a substantial contribution to victory over Hitler, and which were expected to make substantial contributions to reconstruction after the war, should somehow be recognized as having more weight than the countries which had made no contribution at all.

As things turned out, no such recognition was contained in the United Nations Charter, as it didn't matter. Even before the Charter was signed to San Francisco in June 1945, the argument had become academic. The Security Council of great powers had no power of decision unless the great powers themselves were unanimous, and this was almost never vore. The cold war was symbolized by the Soviet abuse of the veto power, and the humble General Assembly, the gathering-place of all nations great and small, became the more effective instrument of the two.

Meanwhile the urgent needs of the cold war and of postwar reconstruction gave Canada the kind of recognition, in practice, that Mr. King had vainly hoped to see written into the Charter itself. Canada's Minister of External Affairs, Louis St. Laurent (soon to become Prime Minister), was the first to propose a regional association for the defence of the Atlantic community — a suggestion which took shape as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). Canada ranked third among the nations contributing to United Nations forces in the Korean War. Canada was one of the most active of founding nations in the Colombo Plan, the Commonwealth-U.S. scheme for capital assistance to underdeveloped countries. Canada's aptitude for mediation was employed in many international disputes from Kashmir, between India and Pakistan, to the borders between Israel and the Arab states.

The most dramatic of these episodes was the Suez crisis of October-November 1956. President Nasser of the United Arab Republic had seized the Suez Canal, owned by British and French interests but passing through Egyptian territory, in July. He had also recently acquired bombers and other military equipment from the Soviet Union, thus becoming a threat to Israel. At the end of October Israel attacked the United Arab Republic in the Sinai Peninsula, with air support from Britain and France, and British ground forces were landed by the Royal Navy and took the city of Port Said at the northern end of the canal. These military actions were denounced not only by the Afro-Asian nations and the Soviet Union, but also by the United States. Israel, Britain and France stood virtually alone in the United Nations, supported only by Australia and New Zealand.

Canada was under strong pressure to take one side or the other. Some Canadians felt that their government should back Britain, right or wrong. Others (probably a majority) felt that Canada ought to support the United States' stand against the use of force. L.B. Pearson, then Minister of External Affairs, did neither. Instead he beat all his energy into and finding a [illegible] on which the United States, Britain, France and most of the other nations of the world, a device whereby peace and order could be restored in the Middle East and protected not by any one great power but by the United Nations itself. The result was the United Nations Emergency Force, to which Canada was and still is a major contributor, and which has been patrolling the Israeli-Egyptian border ever since, with complete success as a peace-keeping body. It was for this service, more than for any other, that Mr. Pearson received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1957.

There have been other occasions since then when Canada has been called upon for peace-keeping services. When the United Nations persuaded President Markarios to allow a peace-keeping force into Cyprus in 1964, Canada was one of the few acceptable countries able to lend a detachment there immediately, by air.

Why was Canada acceptable? Just because Canada is a "Middle Power" in two of the three senses of the phrase. Too small to have imperial ambitions, or to inspire any fear in other nations however frail, Canada is large enough to have armed forces available and to spare for this sort of duty. And Canada, even though a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and a firmly committed ally of the United States, is also a country with a foreign policy of her own, sufficiently independent to prove that she is no satellite of either side in the cold war. For example, Canada has shown her determination to fight against Communist aggression, by contributing a brigade and a naval force to Korea, a brigade and an air division to NATO forces in Europe. But Canada continues to trade with Cuba, and even with Communist China despite the fact that there is no formal diplomatic relationship between the two countries; both these trading relations are in defiance of the policies of the U.S. and of the Organization of American States.

Within the past two years, Canada's armed services have been reorganized and integrated —that is, the three services have been combined — to a greater degree than those of any other country in the world. The new weapons and weapon systems which have been ordered for these integrated forces give a clear indication that in future, Canadian defence policy will be directed more to peacekeeping duty in so-called "brush fire" wars, and less to maintaining a small-sized model of a great power's armed forces. By all indications, Canada of the future will be even more a "Middle Power" than in the past.

JANICE LYNN MILLER MARRIED AT ST. PAUL'S UNITED CHURCH

A pretty wedding was performed in the St. Paul's United Church in Hardisty on Saturday, October ninth at three thirty p.m. when Janice Lynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Miller of Hardisty was united in marriage with Bryan Franklin Morrison, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. James Morrison of Airdrie. Reverand W. G. Zwicker officiated at the ceremony.

The church was decorated with floral arrangements of yellow mums and shasta daisies.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was charming in a floor-length gown of white peau de soie, designed on empire lines. She wore a shoulder-length veil and carried a lovely bouquet of white spider mums and pompons.

Attending the bride was her sister, Miss Orlene Miller, who wore a sheat-length, turquoise peau de soie dress with a matching net headpiece and she carried a bouquet of shasta daisies. Anita Miller, also sister of the bride, was a dainty flower girl in her matching turquoise frock and basket of daisies.

The groom was attended by Jeff Miller, twin brother of the bride, while Lorne Morrison, brother of the groom and Dalton Miller, brother of the bride served as ushers.

For the occasion the bride's mother chose a two-piece knitted suit of forest green with white and black accessories and a green orchid corsage. The mother of the groom wore a deep blue knitted suit with brown accessories and a pink orchid corsage.

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the Rosyth Community Hall with approximately eighty-five guests attending. The hall-table was laid with a white Irish linen cloth which Mrs. Estelle Miller, grandmother of the bride, recieved as a wedding present over fifty years ago. The table was centered with a 3 tier wedding cake, baked by the bride's mother and decorated beautifully by Mrs. Bertha Chapman of Amisk. The master of ceremonies for the occasion was Harold Marrison, brother of the groom.

The bride's uncle, Gary Buxton of Calgary, proposed the toast to the bride to which the groom responded.

The guest book was taken care of by Miss Jessie Bainbridge of Edmonton. A solo "True Love" by Miss Jean Wall of Hughenden was enjoyed during the reception.

A dance followed in the hall and Beebee's Orchestra provided music for the evening.

For traveling, the bride chose a three-piece double knit suit of emerald green with brown accessories and a corsage of talisman roses.

After a brief honeymoon the happy couple will make their home in Edmonton, where both are employed.

Out-of-town guests were present from Edmonton, Calgary, Hughenden, Silver Heights, Amisk, Vermilver, Hinton, Wainwright, Czar, and Wetaskiwin.

Mr. & Mrs. E. Koehli Silver Anniversary

SEDGEWICK—A large crowd of relatives and friends gathered at the United Church hall on Saturday, October 30th, to honor Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Koehli on their 25th wedding anniversary. The hall was decorated for the occasion, and a three tiered wedding cake centered the table reserved for the bride and groom.

A short program was enjoyed by those present, consisting of a vocal duet by Mr. and Mrs. Ralf Jacobsen, two Readings by Mrs. Hans Ozbun, a vocal solo by Victor "Mike" Easely and a humorous monologue by Mrs. Neil MacPherson of Edmonton.

Presentations were made to Mr. and Mrs. Koehli, by their son Brian on behalf of the family, Mr. Hardy Koehli of Daysland for relatives, Grandpa Arthur Falls for the Grandparents, and by Mr. Al Reesh on behalf of the M.D Flagstaff and the community. Each paid tribute to the contributions made by Ernest and Vivian to the life of the community. Mr. Koehli replied briefly, and before closing made a presentation to his wife.

A bountious cafeteria style lunch was served by the women of the United Church, to close an enjoyable evening.

Among those present from outside points were relatives and friends from Daysland and Edmonton, as well as other points from Ernest Edmonton included Mr. and Mrs. Neil MacPherson, Viola and Ethel Falls. Of interest was the fact that Mr. Rusty Wirth of Daysland, who was present, was with a two family excursion of settlers, the Wirths and Koehli's who came to this country early in the century as settlers.

FLAGSTAFF MINISTERIAL COLUMN

By Pastor Dennis Johnson Graves
Baptist Church of Forestburg

Many people ponder in their own heart and ask themselves the question "Am I Saved"? When Jesus Christ comes am I ready to go to be with Him? Was that which I experienced the real thing or am I staking my life on something I know not what? We all have asked such questions at least once in our life time. These are the questions that flash through the mind of one who is trying to find out what his stand really is with Jesus Christ. But how may we know what is a shadow of a doubt that we are saved. The Bible says in 11 Corinthians 5:17 "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." There are three areas in our lives that show evidence of change when we accept Christ Jesus as our Saviour.

First salvation touches our heart. We in our minds begin to analyze the fact of salvation. We evaluate what Jesus Christ has done for us in His death on the cross. We consider God's love in sending His Son even though we were yet sinners. We think of our past life where there was no peace, no joy, no rest, just trial and fear from day to day. Our intellect upon the evaluation of these thinks then decides that a change is necessary and Christ is invited in to do just that. Salvation touches the intellect.

Next we find that salvation touches our will. Our will, we like to think, are our own. We want to make our decisions. We want to tell ourselves what to do. But Christ says that if we confess Him as Lord, Master, Boss in our lives we shall be saved. We then must yield our will to His will. We must surrender, He must increase. He becomes the ruler, we become the servant. Our will is His will. We delight to serve Him. Salvation touches the will.

Lastly, salvation touches our emotion. Salvation is an emotional experience. There may be tears of sorrow because of past sin. There may be tears of joy because of the new peace of God that rules the heart There may be jubilant laughter and singing because of the wonderful transformation. Yes, salvation touches the emotion.

If salvation is yours then you will have experienced a change in these three areas of your life. "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved". Romans 10:13.

doctors are making millions. Regarding Medicare, he said that we have compulsion now in many areas and he could see no real danger in this angle of the proposal. He also thought the Pension Scheme was a step in the right direction, with the portable angle to cover people in whatever area of the country situated.

The rebuttal period consisted mainly of a re-capitulation of previous statements, as no new ideas were allowed to be introduced. The forum wound up with question and answer period.

THAT—a Social Credit Government would extend the functions of the Bank of Canada to include:

A. Making available to the provinces and their municipalities, agencies and public facilities necessary to provide essential services.

B. The provision, directly or indirectly, of capital necessary for economic and industrial projects considered vital to the economy and well-being of the nation but of such a nature that they cannot be expected to attract private capital through ordinary channels.

That—usage where joint projects are approved by mutual agreement a Social Credit Government will replace cost sharing programmes by unconditional fiscal aid to remove to provincial governments the maximum measure of independence in all matters within their constitutional jurisdiction.

Seventh of a Series on "Money Management"

Last week we started to consider your home furnishings dollar in your money management plan.

Beauty from order springs."
. . . William King.

One must understand good design when selecting and arranging furnishings, to achieve an orderly and thus beautiful effect in their home. Through this you would make the most of your dollars and not waste them on articles that are not suited to the design of your rooms.

To understand good design one must realize that one of the first rules of good design is that it be functional as well as beautiful. A well-designed chair is handsome and comfortable . . . a well-designed window treatment benefits and provides adequate air circulation, privacy and light control. You can learn to judge good design and apply it to your decorating plan if you understand the elements and the principles of design.

The elements of design include line, form, texture, and colour.

1 Line is the basic element of design There are actually only two types of line, straight and curved

Straight lines create a feeling of stability, vitality and force. If vertical they create an illusion of height and slenderness, making a dignified, formal atmosphere. Horizontal lines carry the eye across and create an illusion of shortness and width. Diagonal lines are usually active and stimulating.

Curved lines produce a feeling of grace, flexibility and freedom. A room using mostly curved lines seems feminine and graceful.

2 Form is a three dimensional shape made up of a combination of lines. They include squares, rectangles, pyramids, spheres, cylinders and cubes. The first two are the basic shapes of most rooms and most furniture. You can use a variety of forms in different sizes and shapes in a room for interest, beauty and utility if they are arranged to complement each other and to create a harmonious effect.

3. Texture is the surface character of material — how it feels and how it reacts to light and shadow. Textures range from rough to smooth, coarse to fine, nubby to plain, hard to soft, dull to glossy. You can use various textures in your home to help set a mood.

Consider the difference between chintz cafe curtains and heavy dulled satin draperies . . . tile floor covering and wall-to-wall carpeting.

Texture can also make a room seem light or dark. Think of the light reflected on the smooth, glossy surfaces of satin, damask or chintz, of glass, of polished furniture, marble or tile, and how light is absorbed by the dull surfaces of burlap, denim, velvet, brick, stone and of carpeting and rugs.

To select suitable textures for your decorating scheme remember

— Use and function — a chair that is used all the time needs to have a durable covering on it that is strong and easy to maintain.

— Variety and interest — you need to have contrast to create interest in your room, e.g. rough, dull brick with shiny copper is a pleasing combination. Textures should complement each other, too. Satin and burlap do not go together because one is formal and the other very casual.

— Unity and harmony — Textures help to unify a room. Several small dissimilar textured items can produce harmony. A room with many unrelated textures creates a scattered, restless feeling.

Next week — COLOUR — the fourth element of design.

PITY FOR THE CITY MAN

This is a time of year when my heart goes out to city-dwellers. It's a time when rural or smalltown living is immensely superior to that in the concrete canyons, the abominable apartments, the and suburbs of metropolis.

In the city, day ends drearily in the fall. There's the long, wearying battle home through traffic, or the draughty, crushed, degrading scramble on public transportation.

The city man arrives home fit for nothing but slumping for the evening before the television set. And what greets him? The old lady, wound up like a steel spring because she hasn't seen a soul she knows all day, there's nothing to look at but that stupid house next door, exactly like their own, and the kids have been giving her hell.

He's stuck with it. For the whole evening. That's why so many city chaps have workshops in the basement. It's much simpler to go down cellar and whack off a couple of fingers in the power saw than listen to Mabel.

Life is quite different for the smalltown male. He is home from work in minutes. He surveys the ranch, says, "Mind get them storm windows on one of these days." and goes in, to the good fall smells of cold drinks and hot food.

His wife saw him at breakfast, again at lunch, has had a good natter with the dame next door, and has been out for two hours, raking leaves with the kids. She doesn't need him.

Instead of drifting off to the basement, the small-town male immediately tries that this is his bowling night, or he has to go to a meeting on the Conservation and Slaughter Club, and where's a clean shirt. And that's all there is to it.

While her city counterpart squats in front of TV, guessing her motives and wondering why she didn't marry good old George, who has a big dairy farm now, the small-town gal collects the kids and goes out to have leaves.

There is nothing more romantic than the back streets of a smalltown in the dark of a fall evening. Piles of leaves spurt orange flames. White smoke eddies. Neighbors call out, loud on rakes. Women, bewitched like gypsies, heap the dry leaves high on the fire. Kids avoid the subject of bedtime, dash about the fire like sensible gnomes.

Or perhaps the whole family goes to a fowl supper. What, in city living, can compare to this finest of rural functions? A crisp fall evening, a drive to the church hall through a Hallowe'en landscape, an appetite like an alligator, and that first wild whiff of turkey and dressing that washes your brain backs and the juices flow free in your cheeks.

But it's on weekends that my pity for the city-dweller runneth over. Not for him the shooting-match on a clear fall Saturday, with its good-humored competition, its easy friendliness. Not for him the quiet stroll down a rising like clouds of mosquitoes, sunny wood road, shotgun over arm, partridge and woodcock.

It's not that he doesn't live right, or doesn't deserve these pleasures. It's just that it's physically im-

GREEN ACRES

By A. E. EDWARDS
Dist. Agriculturist
Sedgewick, Alberta

The practice of moving trees in the fall is popular. For best results Mr. P. D. McCalla of the Department of Agriculture recommends the following procedure.

—Take as much of the roots as possible when the tree is dug up. Some top pruning may be necessary to counteract the root loss.

—Dig the trees on a cool dull day possible to get to them easily. If he wants to crouch in a duck-blind, at dawn, he has to drive half the night to get there.

Maybe on a Sunday or holiday, in the fall, the city family decides to head out and see some of that beautiful autumn foliage. They use it, during the two hours. And with 20,000 other cars, they crawl home in lots afternoon bumper to bumper, the old man cursing, the kids getting hungrier, the mother growing swollen.

Smalltown people can drive for 15 minutes and hit scenery, at least around here, that leaves the breathless. Or they'll wheel out a few miles to see their relatives on the farm, eat a magnificent dinner, and sit around watching TV in a state of delicious torpor.

Yep. It's tough to live in the city, in the fall.

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR BULLETIN:

CHIP LAKE GIRL WINS SPECIAL AWARD

Doris Pollard of Chip Lake is too young to be named a Junior Citizen of the Year. She is only four years old. Yet this tiny girl rescued her two brothers and baby sister when fire destroyed their home!

On December 22, 1964 Doris was in the house playing with her two little brothers. Mrs. Pollard had to accompany the veterinarian to the barn to look at some sick animals.

Suddenly there was a terrific bang — sparks from the stove were everywhere. Doris hurried her two young brothers outside — then she went back into the burning house and carried out her baby sister Sharon. Doris is the tiny other little girl of her age, but on that fateful day last December, she acted like a mature adult!

We congratulate Doris on winning this Special Award. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspaper Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility companies.

This is a Special Award announcement made in connection with the Junior Citizen of the Year program. Over special thanks to Rene R. Smith, editor of the Western Review and to Doris' roommates, Mrs. H. Bruser of Wildwood.

PRUNEFACE

By Bert Odland

Ever woke up in the morning feeling like a Prunelace . . . all dried out and wrinkled feeling? Chances are you have. And the chances are that it happened in the wintertime when the house is being heated quite steadily.

In fact, it is happening to many people everyday. You see, when air is heated, its ability to hold moisture increases by leaps and bounds. That dry air needs moisture so it swipes moisture wherever it can, and that includes your face. So that is why heated air dries out your skin, your hair, your eyes, your throat.

Millions of Prunefaces across this land of ours are looking for a way out of this predicament. "Let's add some moisture to this heated air before it reaches our delicate and oft-abused faces," they creak through parched lips.

Well, many kinds of devices have been tried. Most of these "humidifiers" have been pretty ineffectual. UNTIL NOW.

Our Lennox Humidigray is a spray type humidifier that connects to a warm air heating system. It can actually add up to 10 gallons of moisture a day to the air in a home. It's the answer to most dry air problems.

So, Prunefaces of the world, take heart. Help is at hand. The fee is nominal. The relief is great. The phone number is 64 KILLAM

PARLIAMENT FACES MINORITY

CLIFFORD SMALLWOOD

Clifford Smallwood, P. C., incumbent member of Parliament, swept the Battle River-Camrose Riding with an over 6000 vote majority over his nearest rival, Social Crediter Fred Barber. This was Cliff's fourth victory.

Prime Minister Pearson's Liberal Government in winning 128 seats in the Nov. 8 election will be called upon to form another minority government. Falling five seats short of a bare majority, the new government will face a combined opposition of 137, made up of 99 Conservatives, 21 N.D.P's., 5 S.C., 9 Creditists and 2 Independents.

The Prairie Provinces went almost solid Conservative. Social Credit suffered a serious setback, Alberta returning only two members.

Locally in the Battle River-Camrose constituency, it was no battle, as Conservative Cliff Smallwood swept the field, doubling the count on his nearest rival, with over 13,000 votes.

Due to the nearness of the Christmas season, it is not likely that Parliament will re-convene until the new year.

LESTER B. PEARSON

M. D. Council Discusses Blacktop Alliance To Camrose

An adjourned meeting of the M. D. Flagstaff Council was held in the Board Room with all council members & the secretary present.

Letter from the Traffic Planning Board Engineer, Dept. of Highways stated that in making application to close the crossing at Alliance & re-locate it to the west, the Dept. was in error in not contacting the M. D. The letter said that in making future applications this oversight would not be repeated.

Council discussed the letters sent to Counties of Paintearth and Camrose, also Villages of Alliance, Galahad, Heisler and Forestburg re proposed application to the Highways Dept. to blacktop the highway from Coronation to Camrose. The meeting was informed that no replies to these letters had been so far received. It was moved that application be made to the Minister that his Dept. consider the construction of hard surface on road from the Alliance area to the city of Camrose, and that such highway be included in and part of primary system of the province.

Council was approached by Jubilee Insurance Agencies, to insure the M. D. Tools. Council ordered a list of tools to be taken and given to members at the next meeting.

At the request of the Bridge Department, a list of bridges required for 1966 was submitted.

The request of council to incorporate the gravel on the N. E. 34-40-16 as a part of Big Knife Provincial Park, has been granted.

The Council of Flagstaff will place 600 cubic yards of gravel in Big Knife Provincial Park.

Advice was received from Town of Daysland that they were presently installing a water supply and distribution system, and that they would be making some adjustments in their fire fighting equipment. They suggested that the council of Flagstaff might be agreeable to paying a portion of the cost of a new fire fighting unit in order that it might be available for rural fire calls. A letter from the Village of Forestburg was also discussed, on the same subject.

Council viewed the working of a King Backhoe Loader, with a capacity of two cubic yards and a 14-foot digging depth.

On re-convening after lunch, Mr. Alex Mearns of Ferguson Supply informed council that the price of above machine was $10,000.00, and the company would allow $4488 as a trade in value on the backhoe now in use. The matter was left in abeyance pending the return of the Reeve.

Letter was received from Canadian Engineering Surveys outlining the services available to municipalities with the rural road study prepared by the Provincial Government.

A similar letter was received from Associated Engineers outling the services available.

A discussion on the matter of implementing the rural road inventory study took place and it was decided to leave the matter in abeyance pending return of the Reeve.

A letter from the Dept. of Highways indicated that the Dept. will again have a contingency appropriation for 1966, and wished to have council make known their wishes in this respect, including the regravelling of completed projects if required. After some discussion it was moved that application be made to have that portion of the contingency read from Sec. 34-40-11 east to the bridge crossing regravelled and that the balance of the appropriation be used to reconstruct the project presently under construction from old highway 36 (Please turn to page 7)

Political Forums!

There is reason to doubt the effectiveness and value of sponsored Political Forums. This fact is becoming apparent even to the candidates, some of whom would rather conduct their own campaign unhindered by the rules and regulations which forums place upon them. Furthermore this fact is confirmed by the poor attendance which these meetings command. The public is entirely aware that the question periods for instance are almost a farce, in as much as a candidate can give an unsatisfactory or an unrevealing answer under protection of the chair. The asker has no recourse, but must accept the reply, even if unanswered. Candidates depending on the particular forms of their parties, the technical aspect of which many of them are uninformed and unable to give satisfactory answers. In this respect it should be obligatory that he confess his inability to answer. Where he has the knowledge to answer, he should do so, and should be obliged to courtiously ask the questioner if his question has been answered satisfactorily. Certainly if we want people to attend these meetings they should not be hindered from seeking knowledge and demanding answers where it is possible to get them. It is here that the chairman of these meetings has a distinct responsibility, not only to the candidates but to the public. There is good reason for apathy on the part of the public, and a fair percentage of undecided voters, for they have come to know that no matter how thin you slice it, politics contains a lot of baloney. In our affluent society we've quit eating baloney.

"I Think That I Shall Never See"

"I think that I shall never see, a sight more beautiful than a tree," is a quotation familiar to many, and one most difficult to refute. Trees have an appeal to the artistic minded, provide a sanctuary for our feathered friends, a shaded haven of rest for the weary traveller and provide a valuable asset for nature and mankind. Man has persisted in his desruction of these guardians against soil erosion and protectors of agricultural lands, and over the years have paid the penalty for his thoughtlessness. It is acknowledged that man has gone too far in such wanton destruction, and recent years have seen a concerted program to replenish and safeguard this natural resource. The program of reforestration started some years ago now shows encouraging signs of righting this wrong. If is indeed refreshing therefore to learn that one of the important Centennial Projects of the Province of Alberta will be a program of tree planting which will continue well into 1967. Designed to beautify Alberta and establish living monuments to the future, the program is worthy of the fullest co-operation of the province's citizens. An intelligent program should be outlined by every community in Alberta, and the slogan for every citizen might well be, "Let me see where I can plant a tree."

Might Stop The Mayhem!

Hockey arenas throughout the West are being cleaned out and put in shape for flooding in readiness for the upcoming season, bringing to thought a matter that has been on the minds of many sports enthusiasts for a number of years. What can be done about the mayhem that goes on in our present game of hockey? It is of no small concern to parents, spectators and players alike that the game has gotten out of hand so far as rough and dirty play is concerned. It is public knowledge that today there are many deliberate attempts to put players out of action by methods which are obviously contrary to rules of the game. That these methods are used with the blessing of coaches and managers alike, is now becoming a concern of the players themselves. It is therefore interesting to note that a recent court ruling in Manitoba allows a player to sue for damages if he is deliberately injured by another player during a game. This may go a long way to end the mayhem on Canada's amateur and professional ice rinks. The possible affects of this ruling over a long term period, which sets a precedent in Canada, are today being examined closely. It is certain that some kind of limit must be placed on a player's immunity from liability. It is realized of course that the conduct of players in the heat of a game is instinctive and unpremeditated, but an injury inflicted with definite intent, even where there may be provocation, should be punishable by law. The only question to remain unanswerable at this time is whether or not players will take advantage of the ruling Players seem to have a code of their own, which is retaliate where necessary. If the ruling is used effectively there is a great possibility that potential topnotch players will cease to be side-lined by permenent injuries before their careers are well established. We may yet get the game back to one of sport, finesse and skill, lifting it out of the dirty game it has become today. This we are all for.

Dear Sir:

As I watched the new Legion Hall in Killam being erected the thought occurred to me that surely a more suitable location could have been selected. With parking facilities at a premium around the arena and the curling rink, this winter we will find a good portion of available space lost to us. This will go on all winter with many of us forced to walk a block or even more after parking. Wanting your car up between periods and games will be another inconvenience. Instead of facilities being made for the public, they only create further hardship. —A hockey Fan.

THE VALUE OF CHRISTIAN ETHICS

Not so long ago we read in a Calgary newspaper that a professor on the staff of the University of Alberta, Calgary, told a public audience of students that there is no God and also insinuated that Christianity is more or less a fable.

In a democratic country every person has the right to his own opinion about religion. But one do not think an atheist is wise to so publicly expressing his anti-Christian views. His views may disturb a lot of people, and what has he to substitute for the ethics of Christianity?

The teaching of the Christian Bible are so interwoven in the social and governmental fabric of a nation that if these teachings were neglected or forgotten it would mean the loss of the standards by which both private and public moral are judged; all the standards by which men and women endeavour to better themselves and their surroundings.

"I say the flame of Christian ethics is still our highest guide," wrote Sir Winston Churchill. To guard and cherish it is our first interest both spiritually and morally. The fulfillment of spiritual duty is vital to our survival." —Brooks Bulletin

Words, But No Answers

by Ray Argyle

Six weeks of campaigning was settled in a few hours of voting & now a post-election euphoria has settled over the country.

But if the election was supposed to have been a Great Debate on the vital issues facing Canada, then the campaign which ended Nov. 8 must go down as the debate which never happened.

For all the frenzied speech-making, how close did the parties ever come to telling the Canadian people how they would deal with the two main problems of this country — national unity and national survival?

All the candidates, from the party leaders to the least known outback nonlizee, paid the usual lip service to these questions.

But no one, in the words of Adlai Stevenson "talked facts to the people."

Perhaps this was what the people sensed in the apathy of the campaign. Where was the party leader ready to take the unpopular stand in the interest of principle? Where was the candidate who was willing to admit that his party had anything but a perfect formula for the problems that face the country?

Let's dissect those two key issues — national unity and national survival — and see how we stand in this recent campaign.

On the question of national unity, it must be evident that whether English Canada likes it or not, Quebec is going to re-shape Confederation as we have known it since 1867.

The Liberal Party, which says it is dedicated to "co-operative federalism," never at any time during the campaign explained just what this means.

Does it mean one set of deals for Quebec and another for the rest of Canada?

As repugnant as this may seem on the surface, this may indeed be the only way to preserve Confederation. Quebec perhaps is going to have to be given a special status, and be allowed to go its own way on many matters. It is already doing this by opting out of certain federal - provincial programs, and setting up its own embassy in such areas as the common market question program.

On the other hand, do the Libarals stand for a weaker central government generally by giving all provinces the same latitude as Quebec, so they won't be accused of appeasing French Canada?

A special status for Quebec — which Mr. Diefenbaker has thundered against — may at least be preferable to weakening federal authority over the other nine provinces. But it is politically expedient to keep the voter's mind off such subject.

The Liberal government, during the past two and one-half years, has still not taken steps on the road to some kind of common market with the United States. The auto trade pact, which was set up in such a way that U. S. companies must build cars Canadian subsidiaries to sell in the U. S., was the prime example of this trend.

But at the same time, finance minister Gordon was following a policy of economic nationalism aimed at securing greater Canadian ownership of our industry.

Are the two aims compatible? Canadian industry needs foreign markets, and the greatest market in the world is just over the border. Can we get into this market without sacrificing our national identity? No one has told us how.

The election just ended may mark a turning point in the personalities of Canadian politics and perhaps of politics of the parties.

There is every likelihood that within the next three years the Liberal, Conservative and NDP parties will all have new leaders. The results of the next few days may give some indication as to how soon those changes can be expected.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Pensions & Politics

OTTAWA — There is at least one good thing about Federal elections — they give Canada's older folk more attention, and more benefits than they're ever apt to get say other time. The election just concluded was certainly no exception.

Pension promises fell thick and ripe from the lips of every party leader, in spite of the expectation that the new Canada Pension Plan would take this matter out of politics for all time to come. At least that's what the Liberals had expected.

Back in 1952 when Jody LaMarsh introduced the first, feeble version of the Canada Pension Plan, she remarked that no longer would old pensions be a political football. In the same speech however, she was as bitterly partisan, that she practically assured that pensions would continue to be political football.

The path towards the Canada Pension Plan was rocky, and beset with provincial pitfalls. But eventually it was traversed, and the contributory plan to assure all older Canadians a reasonable security will go into effect in January. That, thought the Liberals, was that.

But they reckoned without the other parties' interest in pensions for the two and a half million Canadians who are now 65 who get no special benefit from the Canada Pension Plan.

These people instead, benefit only from the flat-rate old age pension of $75 a month, payable next year at age 70, and by 1970, at age 69. It was this flat-rate pension, rather than the Canada Pension Plan, which became the election issue.

There was considerable irony in the whole situation. History seemed to be repeating itself. There were the Liberals confident that the Canada Pension Plan was a wonderful achievement, as it was. Suddenly they were surprised and hurt when the Conservatives, NDP and the Secreds turned on the heat over the flat-rate plan.

Each of these parties offered to increase the flat rate pension from $75 to $100 a month. They advertised it and promoted it all over the country with good effect.

It began to look like 1957 when John Diefenbaker blasted the St. Laurent Government for its measly increase of $6 in the old age pension.

"The six-buck boys," he called them, and went on to win the election, helped, it must be confessed, by a great many other factors at the time.

Jolted into action, Mr. Pearson quickly began an exposition of the Canada Assistance Plan. Beforehand, he had merely mentioned this program which is being worked out with the provinces to provide security for old people, the sick and the disabled. He outlined the manner in which older people who needed it, could get pensions of up to $125 a month under the Canada Assistance Plan.

John Diefenbaker pounced on this. Older people who needed it, he said, meant a means test and that was "The meanest test of all". These pensions, he pointed out, would not be paid to everyone on application date to those who needed them. Those who didn't need extra money would get only the flat rate pension of $75 a month.

He however, proposed to give $100 a month to everyone, regardless of need.

The Liberals were caught on the pension issue, just as they were in 1957, and were never able to regain ground on this particular front.

It was an old, old pension story. The first federal and universal old age pension was paid in January 1952. It was the princely sum of $40 a month, payable at age 70. There was an election in 1953 .The Liberals won.

Just before the 1957 election, the ageing St. Laurent Government thought it advisable to make an increase to $46. The six buck increase was used with devastating effect by Mr. Diefenbaker in the subsequent campaign.

When the Conservatives came to power they added a $9 increase, in November 1957, to make the pension $55 a month. Then just before the 1963 election they increased it again to $65 a month.

In October, 1963, the new Liberal Government under pressure from the majority opposition increased the pension to $75. Then the Liberals announced a plan to pay the pension to everyone at age 69, gradually reducing the age from 70 over a five year period.

Now the pressure is on for an increase to $100, payable eventnally to everyone at age 65. It this is done, by 1970, the cost of the old age pension will be three billion dollars a year.

Only the Conservatives have offered an idea about where this huge sum of money should come from. Mr. Diefenbaker says it should come from the Canada Pension Fund. But he ignores the fact that Quebec has its own funds, and that the other provinces, by law, will control the Canada Pension Fund.

His plan in fact, could be carried out only by amending the Canada Pension Plan, which would take two years and require the consent of all nine provinces.

But in the great pension auction, difficulties of achievement never deterred any politician. He just makes the promise. The experts will have to carry it out.

This is an Alberta Oilfield?

Can you find the oilwell? It is there, even though it isn't obvious, because this land has been reclaimed for agricultural purposes. While the surface was being used for mineral operations, the Surface Reclamation Council, a branch of the Alberta Department of Mines and Minerals, administered maintenance-of-land regulations and, when operations ceased, established standards for the reclamation of the surface. The surface of all lands used for drilling, mining, quarrying and pipe-lining must be reclaimed to save Alberta's land for future generations.

Since 1947 Alberta has experienced tremendous development of its oil and gas resources. Through policies established by the Legislature and administered by the Department of Mines and Minerals these resources have been developed as an orderly manner, for the greatest public good, netting Alberta 1,325 millions of dollars.

DO YOU KNOW!

THAT—this year Alberta is celebrating its 60th (or "Diamond") anniversary as a Province, having become a part of confederation in the year 1905. For half of this time, from 1935 to 1944, it has been under the administration of a Social Credit Government.

THAT—Premier Ernest C. Manning has been Premier more than twenty times longer (11 1/2 times as long as any other) and over 30% of the life of the province.

THAT—Over 61,000 Alberta farms are now served with electric power, most of this through use of the revolving fund which has been put to 44 million dollars of low interest money.

THAT—Per Capita Public and Private investment is the highest of any province in Canada, a real indication of the tremendous climate of confidence in a Free Enterprise Way of Life.

And till what He thought was best;
He put His arm around him
And whispered come to rest.
The golden gate stood open
Two years ago today;
He gently slipped away.

Ever remembered and sadly missed by his Mother, Wife Ethel and Family. 39-1-c

Reynolds - Child Wedding Performed At Killam United Church

KILLAM—Knox United Church was decorated with fern and mum bouquets for the marriage of Sandra Jean Reynolds of Clive, on Saturday, October 23rd. The Rev. Mr. Foley Peterson performed the double-ring ceremony.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father to the strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin played by Miss Eunice Grymaloski. She was radiantly lovely in a floor-length gown of white satin with net overlay. Styled with flippant sleeves, the lace jacket featured an embroidered pearl pearl collar. The shoulder-length veil was held in place by a pearl-covered tiara and she carried a bouquet of cascading red roses.

The maid of honor was Barbara Child, younger sister of the bride, and the bridesmaid was Darlene Kane of Clive. They were gowns of taffeta in apricot and mint green featuring boat necklines, short sleeves, ball-shaped skirts and matching head-pieces of net with white organza bows. They carried bows colored plastic purses with contrasting red and apricot corsages.

The little flower girl, Carol Jean Baker, cousin of the bride, wore an apricot taffeta dress and her head-piece was a white head bow. She carried a basket of [illegible] roses.

The groom was attended by Dale Bell and Bob Short, the latter ushering along with Richard Child. Miss Mary Smolski as soloist sang the Haverais Wedding Song.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The bride's mother wore a wool knit dress of peacock blue with pink and black accessories and corsage of white carnations. The groom's mother wore a plain camel shift of wool crepe with brown accessories and corsage of white carnations.

Attending especially for the occasion was the bride's great grandmother, Mrs. Jane McCook, who wore a blue crepe gown with pink corsage.

A beautiful three-tiered wedding cake baked by the bride and decorated by Mrs. Wayne Prichard, graced the bride's table. Master of Ceremonies was Mr. Gordon Le Breton, uncle of the bride. Grace was given by Rev. Peterson, Mr. Bruce Baker, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast to the bride, to which the groom responded. Miss Mary Smolski was in charge of the guest book.

For their wedding trip to the Cypress Hills and other points in Southern Alberta, the bride wore a blue tweed suit with white accessories and corsage of a single Calla lily centred with a deep red rosebud. Upon their return they will reside on the farm at Clive.

BEAUTIES OF THE PRAIRIES

One Fall in particular—when we lived on the old Homestead, we decided we needed extra help as there was an extraordinary big crop to take off.

Our lads had become acquainted that Summer at Camp with another chap who—although he had never been on a farm before—had mastered the fact that he would like to come out to our place that coming Fall and help with the harvest.

Bob had lived in the city all his life—twenty-three years—although he did spend two weeks of every Summer at a Camp which nestled among the hills beside a lovely lake.

Then, you can imagine—or can you? Bob's re-action when he saw a sun-rise on those flat prairies for the first time—followed that same evening by a gorgeous sun-set. To us—who had seen these most awesome sights all our lives—a beautiful sun-rise or sun-set was one of the richer things we accepted from God's bountiful Hand almost as our just dues (Although I will admit—whenever I did take time to admire it—my whole being thrilled at it's magnificence)

Bob was out on the back doorstep, which was on the east of the house, that first morning and actually stood as if petrified—absolutely speechless. The sun was just propping up over the horizon—away out across that prairie land—and painting the whole eastern sky—first, a soft golden splash—followed almost immediately by a lovely pink-ish-rose shade—then a bright red. It looked as if the whole sky was on fire. Then the sun was shining in Bob's up-turned face.

To us—who had seen literally hundreds of sun-rises—it didn't seem possible that any grown-up had never had the same pleasure. After Bob had stood there in wonder and amazement for several minutes, one of the lads remarked, "Well, come on, Bob, let's get crackin'. What's the matter? You paralized?"

"Man, oh man", exclaimed Bob "Does it look like that EVERY morning?" "Clear days, it does", he was told "But wait until evening and see that same sun set. Even in the winter time when the leaves are all off the trees—looking at a sun-set through the bare branches is something to write home about", added my Husband.

At quitting time that evening—Bob was just coming around the corner of the barn with the team when suddenly he stopped and stood stock-still. The western sky was changing color—and Bob just stood there—forgetting everything and everyone, just spell-bound at the sight, which, to him, seemed the most un-real. One of the lads came and took Bob's team and took care of it. Bob still stood there—with that rapt, far-away, un-believable expression on his face. There was'nt a sound except the soft moo-ing of the milk cows and the tinkle of a cow-bell down by the creek.

At long last, Bob turned to the lads and said, "All my life I've lived in an apartment block which was surrounded by tall buildings, and I never had the opportunity to witness anything like that. Oh man! I've seen PICTURES of a sun-rise and sun-set, but didn't think it was even natural, thinking it all was just imagination."

"If you are still here when cold weather sets in—we'll show you the "Northern Lights" in Bay, they are really wonderful—I mean one of the lads, as if to dispel the emotion of the moment.

Bob was still at our place until after the first part of December. True to his promise—the last task Bob cut—was one cold night—and called out to the city lads, "Look". The night was clear and crisp—exceptionally cold. The "Aurora-borealis" streamed across the northern sky—capping and crackling, weaving and dancing fantastically—as if putting on a special show just for Bob's benefit. Bob just stood there, not speaking or moving—just gazing heaven-ward. Several nights after that he would quietly slip out and stand there in the cold looking up to the sky—hoping to again see the wonder of such a phenomenon.

Again I repeat—to those of us to which such sights as those described in this story are common-every-day occurrences—cannot begin to give the feeling one would experience when seeing them for the first time.

Surely, we are most grateful to our Creator who has placed these beauties here on earth for our enjoyment and pleasure.

EXTENSION T.V. PROGRAMS!

Any suggestions for topics would be appreciated.

FARM BUSINESS ANALYSIS!

In February of this past year 16 farmers in the M. D. of Flagstaff joined the regional Farm Business Analysis group sponsored by the Alberta Farm Economics Branch, through the Local District Agriculturists. These farmers reported the material from their Farm Accounts on a special Business Analysis Sheets.

The Alberta Farm Economics Branch has completed the Analysis sheets from this district along with those from four other M. D's. and Counties in East-Central Alberta, and compiled a report of 82 farms. These reports are now being returned with advisory assistance to the participants regarding future farm management practices that will improve the farm return.

Any farmers with good farm records who would like to participate in this program this coming year, are invited to contact Art Redwards your District Agriculturist for further particulars. The Edmonton Economics Branch has obtained computers that will speed up the compiling of the Farm Analysis this year. It is hoped that reports received from farmers in early February this year can be returned by late April before spring work gets into full swing.

Your D. A. would also like to help any farmers who would like assistance in setting up proper farm records. The new Prairie Provinces Farm Account book Available at this office, is highly recommended.

Komick-Culbert Rites Held At St. Joseph's

On Saturday, September 18th St. Joseph's Church, Killam was beautifully decorated for the marriage of Shirley Margaret, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Culbert of Sedgewick, and Mr. Julius Komick, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Komick of Vegreville. The double-ring ceremony was performed by Fr. Adam, uncle of the groom.

The bride looked lovely in a white satin sheath with train and a shoulder-length veil. Her bouquet was red roses.

The bride chose as her attendants, her sister Faye Culbert, Gail Lommen and Helen Chaupik, a cousin of the groom. They wore identical street-length dresses of sky blue satin and the maid of honor medium blue satin. They carried bouquets of yellow and white mums.

The groom was attended by his two brothers Ralph and Sylvester, and Sonny Lommen. Guests were ushered to their pews by Ted Dyer and Alvin Chemke.

The mother of the bride wore a two-piece teal blue suit with white accessories and corsage of yellow tea roses. The groom's mother wore a blue printed taffeta dress with beige accessories and corsage of yellow roses.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in St. John's parish hall at Sedgewick. The bride's table was decorated with a three-tiered wedding cake, flower of carnation and red rose. Miss Faye Culbert and Johnson proposed the toast to the bride to which the groom duly responded.

Open house was held at the bride's home in the evening, followed by a dance in the Community Hall.

For their wedding trip to Banff the bride wore a three-piece blue double-knit suit with white accessories and corsage of baby mums.

By Bert Collard

Indolicate persons might callit a sign of coming old age. But I call it a keen awareness of yesteryear.

I'm referring to memories that give us a twinge of nostalgia (no, it's nothing at all like neuralgia.) Remember when every auto carried two or more spare tires . . . and what a chore it was to pump one up with the old tire pump? Remember the "Tractor Knee" rodeos with the horn type speaker on top? Radio was something to be lived with.

Remember when Lindbergh flew the Atlantic?

Remember when you hand-fired the furnace? Worse air rose in great masses from the logs together usually located between the living room and the dining room . . . torture to go across barefooted. Then the house would often overheat and you'd have to open a window.

Things have changed, eh, old timer? A flat tire is a rare thing; radio and TV is a marvel; join 6th season ice cascade as casually as you'd drive down to the supermarket. Heating and air conditioning has kept pace with the progress, too . . . yet millions of people still live with the old-fashioned furnace! (Or worse yet, with just space heaters.)

So . . . if your heating system leaves you with chores to do, if it is dirty, noisy, slow heating, it is completely out of date. Why not take it out of the present and put it back with the other memories?

Joe Baker spoke at the Monday night Youth Par Christ when a large attendance of young people was reported. The Wainwright team proved victorious over Hughenden and Killam during the quiz session.

Our Church was represented at the Semi-Annual Conference at Hinton this past week.

The Young Peoples executive had a meeting on Wednesday night to plan the programme for the coming months. It was decided that the project emphasis this year should be more on work and less on giving. As a result the projects for the coming year are collecting toys for Christmas at Bethany Children's Home and organizing and directing the church library. A special musical program was planned for Nov. 20 to raise funds for the purchase of new books. A Youth Banquet was also planned for the Christmas holidays.

Rev. Grymalaski ministered at the Sunday morning service.

The Greenway Crusade with Evangelist and Mrs. Greenway commenced on Sunday night. The singing, instrumental numbers and inspiring message of Sunday night presents us to attend the services each night this week.

"Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." 2 Corinthians 5.17

One of the tragic facts of present day religion is the absence of newness. There seems to be no difference between the man who professes to be a Christian and the who doesn't. The trend of the age is this—"It is enough that I identify myself with some organized system of religion; my way of life doesn't matter." Much of the blame for this can be placed on so called Christian leaders and religious. People are encouraged to "join church" without really knowing Christ. A mental assent to creeds, dogmas and formulas is all that is stressed instead of a heart faith and committment that brings life and newness.

"Let him that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity" is the declaration of the Word of God.

If the Christian is not basically, intrinsically or in principle different from the non-Christian then Christianity is a big failure and the Grace of Christ is ineffective. If I truly believe in Christ with all my heart (which involves total trust and committment) and the grace of God forgives, cleanses and regenerates me, how in the world can I be some old creature? I can't help but be new. I was a child of the devil but through Christ I became a child of God. Shouldn't there be a difference? I was dead in sin but quickened—given life by the Spirit who also dwells in me. Shouldn't I be different? Thank God for a newness provided for the repentant heart who trusts Christ the Blessed Saviour. "If any man be in Christ he IS a new Creature.

Create in me a clean heart O God and renew a right spirit within me. Ps. 51.—Rev. Roy Kanhai, Church of the Nazarene, Lougheed, Alta.

TIME TO RENEW

REMEMBRANCE DAY— November 11th services in remembrance of Canada's War Dead were held in the local towns ehgible and wind and snow flurries. Here members of the Killam Legion are shown in front of the Memorial with the Flag at half mast. Public attendance at the services was down this year probably because of the weather which in recent years has usually been on the cold side.

Chilly Weather Cuts Nov. 11 Attendance

Attendance numbers were cut considerably at the Remembrance Day Services by chilly and uncomfortable weather conditions. The weather not only was a damper on attendance, but caused curtailment of some of the outside program. Both the bugler were hard put to perform.

Generally speaking the Remembrance Services commenced at 10:30 A.M., with two-minutes silence in memory of the war dead at 11:00, the time of day that actual peace time was declared.

Front seats at the services were reserved for the Veterans of both the world wars, and other groups which officially paraded for the occasion. Following the services at which appropriate messages were delivered by Chaplains and Ministers, there were short services at the local Cenotaphs during which wreaths were laid by various groups and individuals in memory of fallen heroes.

Most Legion groups and Auxiliaries held banquets for members and invited guests, and the day's activities concluded with public dances in the evening.

LAYING A WREATH— Every year wreaths are placed on the memorials by various organizations and individuals in memory of those killed in war. Here Cpl. McTavish of the R.C.M.P. lays a wreath on the cenotaph of the same time as similar ceremonies were going on in all the communities in the areas.

Lions Club Donate $4,000 To New Community Hall

The regular monthly meeting of the Town of Daysland was held in the Town Office on November 1st with six Councillors present and Mayor Pryor presiding.

Mr. Milton Torrenger, Manager for the Calgary Power Ltd. in Daysland presented a proposition to the council to change the inconsistent street lights to mercury vapor. There were 11-189 watt and 5-300 watt lights which would be replaced by 175 watt mercury vapor, which would give better light at an extra cost of about $12.00 per month. Council advised Mr. Torrenger they would give their decision at a later date.

Councillor Geo. Cramton presented a cheque of $4000.00 to the Town from the Lions Club. This cheque is to be deposited to the Community Hall account and used for construction of the Community Hall.

It was moved that a Community Hall account be opened in the Bank of Montreal to pay progress bills for the construction of the proposed Community Hall, including progress bills paid out of general revenue. The Secretary and Mayor to have authority to sign cheques.

It was moved that the tender for the Community Hall be awarded to W. J. Bennett Contractors Ltd.

It was moved that the town install water into the house on lot 10, Block 28, plan 8284KY and charge the cost against the property in full cost plus previous tax arrears to be paid off from rent of this property.

It was moved to have Calgary Power interchange 16 incandescent street lights to 175 watt mercury vapor lights. Another mercury vapor light to be added at the corner of Jackson Ave. and East Cottingham St. This to be the same voltage as other lights on Jackson Ave.

A letter from the M. D. of Flagstaff advised that rural fighting units will be further discussed at

STROME AUXILIARY TO HOLD ANNUAL MEETING DEC. 9TH

The December meeting which will be the annual meeting and Christmas Party will be held at home of Mrs. J. Nielsen on Dec. 9th, there will be an exchange of gift.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT— NDP Leader T. C. Douglas meditates a ballot box as though he were assessing the results of the federal election. With a Pearson minority Government returned to Ottawa, Douglas finds his party now holds the balance of power . . . . and the fate of the new Government may very much depend on how the NDP members use the power now in their hands.

OPTIMISTIC— A.M. Runciman of Winnipeg, President of United Grain Growers, has predicted that a bumper crop of wheat will be able to sell all the wheat they can produce. Rams Lose Sudden Death Play Off

Central High Rams who finished in second spot in the High School Football League this year were beaten in a sudden death semi-final by a score of 15-6.

The semi-final against Lotharian College was played at the Camrose Fair Grounds and was a close, hard fought battle all the way.

Rams opened the scoring early in the first quarter to go ahead 6 to 0. Before the quarter was over the Lotharian Team had come back for a major score to tie up the game.

At half time the College team was ahead 9 to 6 having added a field goal in the second quarter.

Both teams put on a fine defensive display during the third quarter and neither was able to score although the Rams came very close as they pushed to the College three yard line before being stopped.

During the fourth quarter the College scored another unconverted major to go ahead 15 to 6 and win the game. This advanced the College Vikings to the finals against Camrose Composite.

This game ended the season for the Central High Rams who have really entertained the fans this year with an exciting brand of football and everyone will be looking forward to the new season next fall.

QUICK END— The football season is now over for the Rams and the fans who watched the exciting games this year. In their last game of the season this year the Rams are shown as they close in on a Camrose ball carrier. He didn't get far as his friends come to a quick end.

Election Statement By FUA President

By Paul Rabey

Canada's election is over, and we still have a minority government. There were no minor changes only.

To the West, the most important loss was that of former Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Harry Hays. Traditionally the agricultural portfolio is held by either an Albertan or a Saskatchewan member, but now the new minister may not be from the prairies at all. Indeed the burden of representing the prairie point of view in the Cabinet seems likely to fall entirely on one man. One effect of that must be that organizations which represent Western agricultural interests become more vigorous and more vigilant.

Many farmers are concerned about the fusture of our grain sales. I do not think they will be affected by the election. The Canadian Wheat Board is the sole marketing agent for grain. The Board sells grain without the assistance of any political party.

Politicians should learn from the election. The public is not impressed by any party as it stands today, and there is no appetite for the kind of public publicking which has marked the last few years. Serious problems face the country, and require careful and long-range policies. The M. P.'s, in a sense, are our hired men. They have been put into Parliament to work out solutions in the best interests of the Canadian people. They must accept the situation of a minority government, and work within it to provide the strong and efficient leadership which Canada requires.

Royal Purple Meets

KILLAM—The Order of the Royal Purple held their regular meeting on November 8th and decide to entertain the Auxiliary Hospital patients on November 27th. The Order also catered on November 10th to guests attending the Elks Installation, and will cater to the banquet for the opening of the Rink Mill.

The Christmas Party for members and their families will be held on December 16th.

W. A. TO SEND CHRISTMAS GIFTS

LOUGHEED—The Anglican W. A. met on October 28th at the home of Mrs. Tom Cookson, with eight members and three guests present. After opening prayer Mrs. Jack Butcher read from the study book.

There was a fair amount of business to discuss due to not having held a September meeting. It was decided to meet the following Saturday at the Church for the purpose of decorating it for the Thanksgiving Service; also to bring Christmas gifts for the Mental Hospital Organization. A donation will also be sent for Northern Missions.

Road Safety Week

Canada's 10th annual Safe-Driving Week will be sponsored from coast to coast by the Canadian Highway Safety Council between December 1 and 7 inclusive. Provincial and community safety organizations as well as government and industry, will participate. This Canada-wide campaign is annually scheduled for the same dates to facilitate promotion and participation.

Safe-Driving Week 1965 will emphasize the responsibility of the individual driver and pedestrian in avoiding potential accident-producing situations. The tragedy of the victim who survives a road crash but is severely injured or crippled will also be stressed.

As in past years, Safe-Driving Week 1965 will serve as an introduction to the December-long campaign against the hazards of the holiday season.

Automation On The Farm !

One farm worker in Canada today is able to produce enough food for the annual requirements of 32 persons, compared to only 10 persons in the 1930's according to an Ottawa release. The same source states that Canadians spend only 25 per cent of their disposable income on food, as against 30 per cent in Britain, 45 per cent in Italy and 60 per cent in the Soviet Union.

An interesting set of related figures was used in a speech made a year ago by Ellison L. Hazard, an American businessman. "A nation's standard of living," Mr. Hazard said, "can be thought of as being inversely proportional to the percentage of its labor force required to produce food. Compare the United States' seven per cent on the farm with Canada's 10 per cent, West Germany's 13 per cent, Japan's 33 per cent, Russia's 39 per cent, India's 70 per cent, and Communist China's 87 percent."

Since then the proportion of the Canadian labor force employed in agriculture has dropped to about nine per cent. Back in the mid-thirties, when per worker productivity on the farm was less than one-third the present level, 30 per cent of the Canadian labor force was employed in agriculture.

The main factor in the increased productivity of Canadian farms, of course, has been increased mechanization. If machines had not taken over so much of the work formerly done by horse power and manual labor, food production would still require a very large part of the labor force, the cost of producing food would be very much higher, as would be prices to consumers. These are facts to be weighed in the "automation argument." In a sense, the agricultural industry has been automated here in Canada — and a good thing it has.

Change Of Emphasis Needed

The "debunker's" riding high these days. Everywhere you turn verbal sharp-shooters are telling us that Canada has nothing worth celebrating in 1967. Our government is inept, our schools inadequate, our churches worthless and our homes disolving, so they say. These critics are skilful and they score some direct hits. They also get a ready hearing. There's a sadistic streak in most of us, and we like to watch the other fellow squirm.

No one would deny the need to scrutinize our institutions & our ethics carefully. We must constantly reform and re-adjust but it's time to ask where all this destructiveness is taking us.

Much as we chafe at their limitations, we live by and through these time-tested social groupings. Without them we are homeless and lost. The late Dr. Lathrop Stoddard of Harvard pointed this out clearly. "Civilization is characterized", he wrote, "by political and social organizations composed of individuals capable of sustaining the elaborate complex and handing it on. It will progress just so far as that people has the ability to bear the burden which it entails."

Caustic criticism is easy and interesting but alone, it is unproductive. Nothing could be further from the temper of our founding fathers. They were men of faith—they believed in God, in this country, in themselves—and fortifield by that spirit they carved out a nation.

Building workable social structures is a slow, frustrating, unspectacular process—the work of teachers, pastors, administrators, parents. They have a right to ask the attackers for blue-prints and solutions, above all for personal involvement. If they cannot produce the first and are unwilling to dig in themselves, let them hold their fire.

The Impregnable C.B.C.

There is probably as much in the Fowler Report on broadcasting that is unacceptable to the Canadian public, as there is that the same public feels should be implemented forthwith. There is evidence that this is so, in the threat made by Alphonese Ouimet to take the case to the public, if there is any curtailment of CBC powers as a result of the report. It is not at all necessary to agree with the Fowler report to conclude that in the final analysis Mr. Ouimet is a public servant and as such simply cannot justly come into the open and fight a case in which he is personally involved. If he does wish to do so, then he should first resign his position to leave himself free to thus defend his position. It is however very unlikely that he will do this, because with the hundreds of employees, which include speakers, propagandists and writers, the CBC is a formidable if not almost impregnable force in Canada. Then too, governments, leading politicians and even back-benchers are ever reluctant to attack the CBC. All are anxious to curry the favor of the Corporation, and in return hopes to get favorable attention. It is a sort of a "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" arrangement. Now Mr. Ouimet has stated that if Canadian writers are to be paid more money, the CBC will have to get more money out of the taxpayers' pockets, so one begins to wonder if the voracity of the CBC can ever be curbed.

Many Tasks Ahead

OTTAWA —One thing that can be chalked up on the asset side of Canada's ledger for 1965 will be a completely renovated House of Commons. With the lengthening sentence of each parliament it has been getting increasingly difficult for the Chamber even reasonably swept out before the members were back in their seats.

Prime Minister Pearson had scarcely spoken the fateful word announcing the vote when work was descended in force & have been at it ever since with the place stripped to the bare boards and steel scaffolding stretching up to the roof. The job it set more than half finished, which should give encouragement that Mr. Pearson might summon the 27th Parliament next month for a short pre-Christmas session. Alas, the Liberals should have learned their lesson about sticking in haste from those 60 days of decision in 1963 when Walter Gordon's retreat from his budget revealed Napoleon's from Moscow.

Mid-January has been suggested as the approximate time the new Parliament will be called. It will require fully this amount of time to prepare a reasoned Government program for the Speech from the Throne, perhaps a week or two more. Mr. Pearson will want to face Parliament with his cabinet all complete, which should mean some major shuffling. There is to be one new and important face in cabinet. The Hon. Bob. Winters member-elect for York West where he replaces hockey player Red Kelly, is President of Rio Tinto, Chairman of the Board of Rio Algom Mines Ltd., and Atlas Steel Ltd., Chief Executive Officer of British Newfoundland Corporation, Vice-President of Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and Canada Permanent Trust and a director of 14 other Canadian companies. His director's fees alone would keep most in luxury.

Mr. Winters will not be easy to satisfy with a cabinet post. Short of shifting the Finance Min to Trade Minister Sharp or Industry Minister Drury, it is difficult to see a post suitable for a man of his calibre. Eventually he seems to have his eye on leadership when Mr. Pearson retires, quite probably before another election. He may well be heir apparent. But, meanwhile it will be interesting to see where the Prime Minister fits him in.

If the government intends to implement the recommendations of the Glassco Commission, the new portfolio of President of the Treasury Board still to be created will be hardly less important than that of Finance. Revenue Minister Benson was being promoted for the job by Mr. Gordon before election plans shaped up. But if Mr. Winters recognized the opportunity and challenge in the new portfolio he might be glad to have it and undoubtedly would be in a position to get it.

The most important vacancy created by the election is the portfolio of agriculture. Defeat of Harry Hays has broken, for the time being, the tradition of a prairie farm Minister. Mr. Pearson has no one he can appoint on the prairies and, if he had, there is no reason why like prairies should be represented in a government which they so roundly rejected. The man obviously in line is the Hon. Maurice Sauve, Minister of Forestry, but Mitchell Hepp is also a possibility. He could take ARDA back into agriculture and the rest of his department which is really a fifth wheel might then disappear.

The post of Solicitor General held by the Hon. Watson MacNaught, victim of the Conservation Minister of Prince Edward Island, is as in and out portfolio, which need not be filled until Mr Pearson has someone for whom he needs a junior cabinet job. Like the prairies, Prince Edward Island no longer rates cabinet representation. The portfolio of Labour, held by Senator Benedick son, will have to be filled.

It may be some weeks before Mr. Pearson is ready to make decisions on the new cabinet line-up. Meanwhile he and his ministers can do nothing better than try, unsuccessfull though they may be, to make up for a lost two months in running the nation's business. If this can be described as the election that never was — for the first time in history a government has been returned with precisely the same number of seats — then the days since September 27 can be counted in government as days that should never have been. September 27 was the day on which Parliament was to have been called to close up a

THE GROWING CRIME WAVE

Crime waves have been building up in Quebec and Ontario in recent years. The influx of gangsters from the big cities has created what seems to have started the criminal trend and there seems to have been no trouble in training local recruits.

The modern gangster is an alert individual, backed by a strong organization with plenty of money to hire the services of the most astute criminal lawyers. The facilities available through scientific inventions are also at his disposal.

It will benoted that aid to police work including telephone tapping, truth-telling machines and hidden microphones are all taboo devices, the use of which is opposed by criminal lawyers. And they have a following who condemn the use of such methods as "infringing on personal liberty".

Gangsters get more opportunities to get away with their crimes through the support of people who yap about their "infringement on personal liberty". And that is right up the alley of the defending criminal lawyers who gain big fees and big prestige for getting criminals off the hook. —Brooks Bulletin

Fanned by a 30 mph wind, fire swept an entire block on the Viking Main Street Wednesday night. Buildings destroyed were the hotel owned by W. E. Store, the entire block was wiped out.

Wanted: New Leaders

Now that it is clear that Prime Minister Pearson will carry on as leader of a minority government, it is also clear that Canadian voters have again rejected both Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker as leaders in whom the country can have confidence.

The defeat of Nov. 8 for the Liberal Party — and a defeat it was, despite their being returned as the largest party — is the third in a row for the two old-line parties.

In 1962 Mr. Diefenbaker was rewarded down from the largest majority in Canadian history, to leader of a minority government. In 1963 Mr. Pearson took over at the head of another minority government. And now, in 1965, the voters have sharply rejected his plea for a majority.

The election ended in almost a stand-off between the Liberals and Conservatives because two small parties were able to hold (and in some cases increase their support).

Real Creatin Creditistes came through in remarkably good condition in Quebec, clinging to 9 seats. Social Credit, which sustained two in Alberta and three in B.C., plus two incumbents in Quebec who were former Socreds, also managed to survive the Liberal majority plus.

And the New Democratic party, which now holds a balance of power position in Parliament, increased its popular vote right across the country while raising its number of seats from 18 to 21.

The fact that these parties could survive can only be taken as an indication that neither of the major party leaders have the confidence of the country.

As the voters were not prepared to trust either party with a parliamentary majority, both the Liberals and the Conservatives are going to have to reexamine their leadership.

The results could be beneficial in that Mr Pearson may now be ready to court the kind of decisive and forceful leadership the country demands.

big backlog of important and in some cases, urgent business.

On April 26 to his budget address, Mr. Gordon announced a radical change from the tax incentives offered to Canadian companies doing additional research and development work. The new incentive plan which will be operative from the beginning of a company's new taxation year — for most of them January 1 st — has never been explained in detail and can't be examined by industry until the legislation is introduced. This may not be done now until after the first quarter of the year.

The revision of the Bank Act more than two years overdue, was a victim of Mr. Gordon's insistance that the Prime Minister call an election. It will have to be re-introduced, perhaps in changed form. In any event, its full impact will not be a certainty until the bill has undergone at least two months of examination by a Parliamentary committee where the banks and the other business interests can be heard. It is leaving thousands of small Canadian investors in the shares of chartered banks in a state of uncertainty about the future of their investments.

Railway legislation, now a product of four years, three governments and four ministers of Transport, must be introduced again in quite different form to the previous bill which was killed by the government last January. Meanwhile, with the railways engaged in negotiation of a new labour contract with the non-operating unions, new government subsidies to pay new wage bills may be in the offing.

Medicare has been promised, based on a Royal Commission report now nearly a year and a half old. Passed by the last Parliament, it would have been a costly affair placing heavier burdens on the taxpayer and increasing government control on the income files. With the strong NDP to satisfy if the government is to get its plan on the statute books it may be still costlier.

Other legislation pending includes:

A Bankruptcy Fraud bill designed to strengthen the hands of the provinces in dealing with the crimes disclosed by the Quebec investigation.

Legislation to establish a rural economic development fund under ARDA.

More legislation needed in the so-called war on poverty.

THAT COLLEGE EDUCATION

It's not until you get a son or daughter off to college that you learn what a simple, unsophisticated, reactionary, narrow-minded, old-fashioned peasant you really are.

He, or she, will make it all quite clear to you on that first weekend home from the hallowed halls of learning.

Every fall, the blood pressure of countless fathers skyrocket, the toe nail hearts of hordes of loving mothers shatter, when the freshman student, beloved and cherished these 16 years, returns to with a bag of dirty laundry and contempt.

We've had quite a fall of it, in our neighborhood. With a sigh of relief we shipped our gawk of a boy off to one university, and amid floods of tears, the people next door sent their darling daughter to another.

Both were home last weekend. And both sets of parents spent the entire visit alternating with fury at the kids and shame at their own ignorance.

There's no question about it. A college education is a wonderful thing. In a matter of three or four weeks, smallmouth kids who barely staggered through high school, and barely knew enough to change their socks or blow their noses, are transformed into mind-numbing playboys or dashing, desirable women of the world. Imagine what a whale your will do.

The boys unanimously toss off a remark or two about beer parties, the girls fight up a fog right there, while father's frozen fingers and mother's pearl falls white and violet.

The boys, with a solid basis of three weeks' lectures in political science, curtly enlighten their dads on the satanic political ideas the latter have cherished for 20 years.

The girls, secure in their three weeks of psychology, put their mothers into shock with casual comments on the necessity of a full sex life before marriage.

Both explain kindly to the old folks not only that all's wrong in the world, but also that God is no longer in His heaven. In fact, He isn't anywhere. He's just a 'anthropomorphic projection of the need for a father image."

Both point out that the capitalistic system is driving us into a neurotic pursuit of the materialistic, that the dollar is essentially an evil thing. And both pocket, without comment, the extra 10 bucks you slip them at departure.

Our kid has discovered a new system, in which you can get along on four hours sleep at night. This is done by sleeping all day, which he did on the weekend. He assured us that he had worked out a night work schedule, which begins at 7 a.m. daily. But a few minutes later, he let it slip out that he scarcely ever ate breakfast at the dining hall, because he slept in.

The girl next door nearly fainted off her father. He gave her a blank cheque, the dope, to pay her first term's fees and residence dues, hoping he could scrape up the second term when it arrived. With admirable sangfroid, she filled in the cheque for the whole year's fees. Next day he received a call from his banker. He had to sell his last bonds to meet the overdraft.

Young Hugh is letting his hair grow long, has taken a lead role in the college revue, plays in a once records at ear-splitting volume and is just busting to get in on a sit-in or a lie-down or some other form of civic disturbance, so he can be arrested.

The girl next door is disgusted that her mother can't read Chaucer in the original and believes the story about Adam and Eve, that man was escaping when she left. With rage.

Oh, well, I guess it's all worth it. Our grocery bill has dropped by $12 a week since Hugh left. And we'll have the last laugh next spring, when exams start.

The Homemaker

EIGHTH IN A SERIES ON MONEY MANAGEMENT

COLOUR—an element of design (partly contributed from "Home Furnishings Dollar" — Household Finance Corporation)

Colour is the first thing you notice in a picture, a dress, a car, a room. It is also one of the least expensive tools of the home decorator. A room can be completely transformed through a new coat of paint, gay slipcovers or bright accessories. Colours may be light or dark, bright or dull, warm or cool. Warm colours are those which suggest fire sun, light-red through yellow on the colour wheel. Cool colours are those which suggest water, foliage, ice, skies and through blue-green on the colour wheel. These are the colours of nature. Neutrals are used in home decorating. Black, white and grey are commonly called neutrals but the term may also refer to tan, beige, brown and natural wood colours. Neutrals are especially suitable for large background areas. Extremely light or dark neutrals also may be effective accents.

The effects of colour vary with the individual and the way and the way it is used. Red is usually considered a stimulating colour but for some it is depressing. Red accents in a bright red can add sparkle to a room, while four red walls may be overpowering. Your personality and your colour will depend on your ability to select colours harmonious and combine them effectively.

If you feel you have trouble in combining colours and textures and patterns use some of the better magazines as a guide. Choose pictures of rooms that look cheerful combinations that appeal to you and copy it directly if you like every thing in it. The colour department stores also offer free home decorating advice and a visit there should make use of. The more help and ideas you can obtain the better. I also give advice to anyone who desires it, on colour selection, draperies, upholstery, carpets, furniture everything that has to do with interior decorating of your home. If your women's group would like decorating talk decoration and or slides on this aspect of homemaking I would be glad to help.

To select the most suitable colours consider:

—Personal preferences. The colours you and your family most enjoy should be your main guide in planning a colour scheme for your home. Rooms to be used for family activities can be decorated in colours to please all family members. Individual rooms can be treated according to individual tastes and preferences.

—Individual rooms. The size, shape and exposure of each room may also influence your choice of colour. Decide which colours will be most effective in different rooms. Small rooms seem larger in light, pale colours—darker or warm colour in light colours with bright accents—large rooms seem cosy and smaller in deep, warm colours and bright accents—architectural features such as radiators or panels doors will be less noticeable in colours that blend with the background—high ceilings seem lower if painted a dark, warm colour.

—Present furnishings. Unless you are starting from scratch, your present furnishings may limit your choice of new colours in a room. Select colours to harmonize with items you now have.

—Desired atmosphere. The mood you wish to create in a room will direct your choice of Colours. Cool, dark, grayed colours help to create a restful atmosphere in a bedroom. Warm, light, bright colours create a cheerful, gay, happy atmosphere for a child's room, a game room, a kitchen.

—Practicality. The ease of cleaning and upkeep may influence your colour scheme. Light colours are easily soiled and may require extra time, money and energy for upkeep. The practicality of light colours can be increased if used on surfaces that can be easily cleaned as washable paint or wallpaper—spot resistant fabrics—washable fabrics. Dark colours show dust and lint readily.

—Textures. The surface texture will influence your choice of colours. Smooth, shiny, surfaces reflect light and make a colour seem lighter and brighter—rough, dull surfaces have the opposite effect. Draperies of red polished cotton seem brighter than draperies of red denim.

While there are colors ways to combine colours, it is not always easy to arrive at a harmonious colour scheme. Decide first on the basic colours you wish to use. Then, consider each colour as it relates to other colours in your plan. Remember that colour looks different in your home than in the store. Try samples where they will be used.

To combine colours effectively consider:

—Sources of attractive colour combinations. Colour schemes may be based on the colours in drapery or upholstery fabrics, wallpaper, a favourite picture or a view from a picture window. You can also find ideas for combining colours in magazines and books, in model rooms in furniture stores or in homes you have visited. If you base your colour scheme on one of these sources, remember to use colours in proportions similar to those in original.

—The areas to be decorated. There are three areas to be considered in applying colour to a room—large background areas including floor, walls and ceiling—medium accents such as upholstery, fabrics, draperies and furniture—small accent areas including lamps, pillows, pictures, accessories. Usually a successful combination of colours for these areas is made up of one dominant colour and two or three supporting colours. Remember that one colour appears stronger in large areas. You may prefer light, grayed colours or neutrals for large spaces. Bright colours are usually most suitable as accents.

—Basic colour schemes. There are two basic types of colour combinations. Similar colour schemes are made up of one colour in varying degrees of lightness and darkness or of colours close to each other on the colour wheel. They produce a restful colour scheme. Contrasting colour harmonies are made up of colours that are far apart on the colour wheel. They create a lively, stimulating atmosphere.

—Neutrals—backgrounds are usually best in light, grayed colours . . . furnishings best in medium to strong colours and accents are best if strong and bright.

Weekly Devotional

MINISTER'S MESSAGE

Two thousand, seven hundred years ago, a young man—about the same age as many confronted those of his time. He went to his church to pray. While in the church he had a profound experience; a great enlightenment; a transcendent awareness of God. God revealed Himself to this man's inner life. Afterward, when speaking to his friends, the young man described it this way, "I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up." He was describing a vision of the prophet Isaiah. He was the Sedgewick-ordained.

Vision is necessary in any person's life. What is our vision as we approach our work, as we do our work, as we read our message, as we go to church or ourselves?

J. B. Phillips, a modern Hebrew scholar, has summed up the Hebrew concepts of God they are these: God is Holy. God is strong (among the concepts are these:—1) God is great and near, but dwells in light and awe 2) God is a personal God, restricting every pleasure 3) He is the sustaining director of the universe. And for his people He is concerned with the individual.

In this our vision of God? If so, we will serve Him with devotion, reverence and obedience. We suffer from spiritual astigmatism. Not until we see God in Jesus Christ in our vision can we see Jesus Christ in our vision rightly. When we see Jesus in Perfect Love, Compassion, Power, and Adequate Redeemer, then our third eye of vision is clear.

What vision of God do you and your neighbours? Are they nearness to be remove, lives to be tolerated, or worse yet, of filling our own needs for fellowship? Not until we see them as people with a need to be met by love everywhere will we have the second third of our vision be clear.

What vision do we have of ourselves? Are we the focal point of the universe? Are we the pinnacle of flesh and bones set in motion for a brief span? Are we of any importance? Not until we see ourselves as "God's temple with His spirit dwelling in us," will the final flowers, card send visits during my stay in hospital. — John L. Muirhead. 27 1 p

37 million acres give Albertans room to grow

Over half the land area of Alberta is public land, protected and developed by the Department of Lands and Forests. Most of this public land has been set aside for forestry, to protect the watershed, to ensure a sustained yield of timber and to provide recreational facilities. From time to time, protected land is made available for agricultural use, particularly in the Peace River district where large tracts of land are undergoing homestead development.

Lands are also made available for private development through public auction and agricultural lease sales, cultivation leases, grazing leases and special permits.

Alberta has all the requirements for tremendous growth and 37 million acres of room in which to carry out that growth in an orderly manner.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

OBSERVING THE LORD'S DAY

We recognize value of sports for the refreshment of the body and the good spirit of our communities and we also are aware of the pressures upon those who are delegated with the responsibility of running and scheduling various sporting events and tournaments in the matter of available time. It is with genuine concern, however, that we view the increasing tendency to schedule such events over the weekends. For the majority of the people Sunday is a day in which to worship God, usually in congregational gathering. Scheduling on Sunday of special events in which many of our people are involved makes it necessary too often to decide between religious convictions and involvement in community activities. This unhappy problem should not be imposed upon us.

We therefore respectfully request that in planning future events sport organizations and other groups refrain from scheduling these events on Sunday if possible, or at least until 1:00 p.m. on Sundays.

James Baker Married At Drayton Valley

A double ring [illegible] was performed in the quaint little All Saints Anglican Church in Drayton Valley, when Carmen Louise second eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Les Oscar of Drayton Valley and James Richard Baker eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Baker of Edmonton were united in marriage at 2 p.m. Sept. 18th, 1965.

The bride entering the church on the arm of her father looked beautiful and happy as she then knelt on the white cushion at the altar, about to become the wife of Richard (Dick) Baker. She was cited in a most becoming long white satin gown with lily point sleeves and lace top, especially made for her by her aunt, Mrs. Lee Hutchinson. Her chapel veil was held in place by a crown of pearl beads and she carried a bouquet of white talismen roses. Her attendants were her sister Miss Anne Oscar as maid of honour and her cousin Miss Susan Oscar as bridesmaid, who were identical street length gowns of Peach colored satin and they carried bouquets of white star flowers.

The bridegroom was charming ly clad in a two piece suit consisting of cool and pants and white shirt and suitable tie. The coat, of rich black material was draped about his shoulders, had long sleeves and met in the front. The pants, of same material were held in place by a belt from the waist and falling in a straight line almost to the floor. The curved simplicity of the garment was relieved by the artistic glimpse of black socks above the genuine leather shoes, laced with strings of the same color. His attendants were his brother Frank and a friend since childhood Mr Norval Smith of St Michael Alberta, who were also dressed [illegible]

The mother of the bride chose a teal blue dress and corsage of roses and her corsage was of yellow roses. The groom's mother chose a three piece suit of peacock blue trimmed in grey, and a corsage of pink roses.

Guests were ushered to the pews by Mr. Ray Oscar and Mr. Ray Hutchinson. Miss Janice Hutchinson was in charge of the guest book. Mrs. Edmunds, faithful organist of the church played the wedding music.

Open house was held at the brides parents from 3 to 5:30 p.m. A reception for approximately 70 guests sat down to a delicious turkey dinner. Bride's table was decorated in pink and white and centred with a beautifully decorated three tiered wedding cake. The reception hall was also in matching colors with most attractive decorations, for this special occasion.

Mr. Ted Oscar brother of the bride and M C for the evening, politely called on several friends of the bridal couple for a surprise speech The response was most sincere and well spoken. Among those to speak were Mr. Bill Ross formerly of Sedgewick, and now of Drayton Valley. Several other gentleman spoke briefly and sincerely of the happy young couple and also wished them every happiness. The proud parents of both bride and groom expressed their gaciousness to the guests present in confirm such a happy celebration. Telegrams were read by the M.C. from Mr. and Mrs. David Hooper, and Mr and Mrs. Dwayne Giles.

The bride and groom then expressed their gratitude in a few well chosen words and announced a dance to follow for the gay and well mannered crowd.

For going away the bride donned a dark green wool suit with black accessories. After a honeymoon in Banff, Jasper, Calgary and Edmonton, the happy couple will make their home in Drayton Valley where both are employed, the bride with Solo Store Super Market and the groom with Pan-American Petroleum.

Out of town guests were from Edmonton, Sedgewick, Daysland, Olds, Hay Lakes, Hardisty and St. Michael.

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

BULLETIN:

OILFIELD TEEN CLUB ORGANIZES "MEALS-ON-WHEELS"

Senior citizens in the Turner Valley district are grateful for the foresight and concern of a group of enterprising teenagers from this southern Alberta community.

The Oilfield Teen Club began its "meals-on-wheels" project last Christmas to give aged and infirm citizens a good Christmas dinner. That was just a start. Hot, nutritious meals are now supplied regularly.

The Oilfield Teen Club has been active in many other ways. It has adopted a Korean boy through the Foster Parents Plan, worked for the Commonwealth Club, furnished a room in the Turner Valley hospital and sponsored social and educational activities. One member recently won three University scholarships, including a national award by the Canadian Legion.

We congratulate the Oilfield Teen Club—this year's Group Award Winner. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspapers Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility company.

SEED CLEANING RATE CHANGE

Many farmers are probably wondering why the Seed Cleaning Rate at the three Municipal Seed Cleaning plants have been increased.

Cleaning rates in this general area have been the lowest in the Province. High volume plants can operate with lower prices, but the lower volume plants are just meeting operating costs.

It is hoped that the new price schedule of 4, 5 and 7 cents will achieve two objectives. For the lower volume plants this schedule will increase the revenues of the plant so they can more readily meet their commitments. For the higher volume plants that do not need additional revenue, the profits will be passed on in the form of increased dividends.

Secondly, it is hoped that the variable price will encourage more cleaning in the off season of the plant and thus lighten the sixteen to twenty four hours per day the cleaning schedules in March to May. Should the present price system not accomplish this, further changes will need to be made in the price schedule another year.

On a thousand bushels of seed cleaned, a one cent increase in the price per bushel amounts to $10.00. This is cheap compared to the advantages obtained from sowing clean seed.

STARTING CATTLE ON FEED!

A critical operation in a feedlot enterprise is to get the cattle started on feed. The main rule to follow is: Cattle Must Be Put On Feed Gradually! Cattle being brought in to the feed lot usually are changed from a high roughage ration to a high grain ration and this change must be made carefully. Sudden changes in the ration or the amount of feed will cause digestive disturbances.

Cattle being placed in a feedlot are under considerable stress from shipment, confinement in close quarters, unfamiliar surroundings, and change in feed and water. The calves are under added stress because they probably have just been [illegible]

To minimize these stresses the cattle arriving in a feed lot should not be handled unnecessarily. Dry bedding and clean water should be provided immediately. Operations such as vaccinating and dehorning should be delayed a few days. The previous diet of those cattle often has been deficient in Vitamin A and minerals and therefore the first feeds should contain adequate portions of these ingredients.

Although changes in feed should be gradual, it is desirable to get cattle on full feed as quickly as possible. A starting ration was designed by the Lethbridge Research Station to be mixed with the regular starting ration and have the cattle on full feed in 18 days. An experienced feeder can reduce this time considerably The starting ration is as follows:

Ration 1 (Lbs Pounds):
Alfalfa Meal, 410, Dried Molasses Beet Pulp, 500; Oats, 500; Barley, 500; Molasses, 120; Phosphate Supplement, 80; Mineral Supplement, 10; Antibiotic Supplement, 7; and Vitamin A, 10, E.

A safe feeding schedule is: Free Choice of hay for 2 days; also Free Choice of starter ration for the next 3 days; 76.25 starter- fattening ration for 4 days; 50-50 starter ration-fattening ration for 3 days; 25-75 starter ration-fattening ration for 3 days. Now you may continue safely with a full feed fattening ration.

The Young Couples meetings commenced again on Monday night in Sedgewick after dispensing during the summer months. A time of recreation, followed by devotion and lunch was enjoyed.

A business meeting followed the weekly Bible study and prayer service. It was with deep regret that the resignation of our Pastor, Rev. and Mrs. Grynnaholt, was accepted. Their speaking and musical ministry here for the past 5 1/2 years has been blessed of God. Their ministry will continue until the end of 1965. A motion was passed that the weekly prayer service resume again on Wednesday evenings rather than Tuesday.

What Color Is Green?

By Bert Odland

What color is green? Silly question . . . or is it?

There's Kelly green, apple green, the green you turn when riding a roller coaster and a thousand more greens. A painter or artist would probably break green down into percentages of blue and yellow. So what color is just plain green? Nobody knows.

I'm not trying to make like Socrates with this kind of talk. But I am trying to point out that it is possible for one descriptive word to cover a range of interpretations. (The possibilities with the word "plot", for example, are infinite.)

And how about the word "fan"? Not a sports fan, but the type that moves air. In the furnace business, the centrifugal type is called a blower. And just as with "green", all blowers are not alike. There are direct-drive blowers, belt-drive blowers, rubber-mounted blowers. And then there is the Lennox Huntsman "Tenling" blower. So what's the big friend, a Lennox Huntsman blower is the most quiet and the most economical to operate. A boast, but true. Here's why!

The motor, the pulleys, the belt, the "squirrel cage" are all mounted on a "U"-shaped frame. This steel frame is then floated on springy rubber cushions. Vibrations (what few there are) are clipped in the bud. They can't be amplified into noise. The dynamic-balanced parts and the self-aligning bearings add to the quietness and smooth operation . . . before only a fraction of the electricity required by less designed blowers. Incidentally, this blower used to be called the "milky" blower because the "U" shaped frame reminded one of the bubbles you used to see at the county fair race track. But the spacemish advertising boys thought of other meanings for "milky" and changed the name to Huntsman. They are like that.

You'll find this Huntsman blower in Lennox furnaces and air conditioners. It's just one of the many reasons why our Lennox products are best in the west and all points east. Come in and see [illegible]

Annual Visitors Night At Board Of Trade

SEDGEWICK—The annual Board of Trade Lady-Newcomer Night was held in the United Church Hall last week with a good turn-out of members and visitors. A banquet was served by the UCW with the ladies and newcomers to the town and district as Board guests.

Due to the absence of Board President Mr. Hedley Bailey, vice-Chairman Beaudro acted as M.C. All business was set aside for the occasion, and the ladies were welcomed and newcomers to the area introduced. West League— Strome, Killam, Holsteer, Daysland, Hardisty.

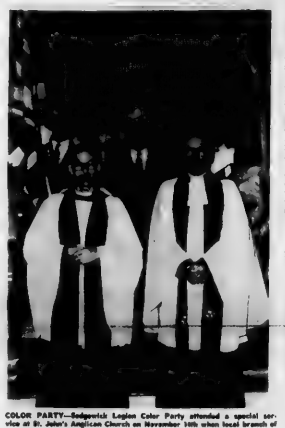
East League—Alliance, Hardisty, Galahad, Sedgewick.

Our first encounter was with Alliance where the boys won and the girls lost. We then travelled to Galahad the next week where both Galahad girls and boys gained a victory. On the 18th, Hardisty then came to town when the Sedgewick boys won and the girls played to a hard fought tie. Every game so far has been a close, exciting, match and we hope the enthusiasm will continue.

A win gives the team two points and a tie is one point.

The top two teams for each league will compete in a tournament at Killam on Jan 18th.—Sports Reporter, Arnold Pederson



COLOR PARTY—Sedgewick Legion Color Party attended a special service at St. John's Anglican Church on November 14th when local branch of the Legion presented the Church with a set of Communion Rails. L. to R. are: David Semar, Rev. Steel, Fred McKee, Archdeacon Cole, and Ray Bottineau.

W.I. Members Hear Conference Report

LOUGHEED—The regular meeting of the Lougheed W. I. was held at the home of Mrs. Howard Pepe with 12 members and 2 visitors present. Mrs. M. Sloberg, president, was in the chair.

The W.I. will help with food and serving at the 4-H Homemaker's banquet on Nov. 23. Instead of having a Bake sale the Travelling Basket will be circulating again soon. A question arose as to whether we were in favor of having baking for competition at the next Constituency Conference. It was suggested that, because the articles are judged on a point system, perhaps more variety of baking be allowed. This is to be discussed with the other Institutes concerned. An electric tea kettle is to be purchased for the Community Cupboard.

Mrs. W. W. Frost gave an interesting and detailed report on the Constituency Conference held in Lougheed. Mrs. J. Bielish, Provincial president, and Mrs. C. Alexander, vice-president, were special guests. Both ladies spoke on the A.C.W.W. Conference held in Ireland which they attended.

Mrs. J. I. Morrison, District Director, spoke on W. I. work and Mrs. A. Olson of Wetaskiwin chose as her topic, "The Care of the Aged."

The District Home Economist judged the Handicraft and Baking exhibits. Lougheed W. I. had most points in both classes.

The Door Prize was won by Mrs. Kashal, who has recently arrived in Lougheed from British Guiana. She sang a solo in her native tongue and was dressed in the beautiful sari of her country.

The Roll Call was answered by donations to the Mental Health Association and exchange of Christmas recipes.

Lunch was served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. G. Marlow.

The next meeting will be held at the school on Dec. 6th. There will be an exchange of gifts. Roll call is to be answered by payment of dues. A sack lunch is to be brought by each member.

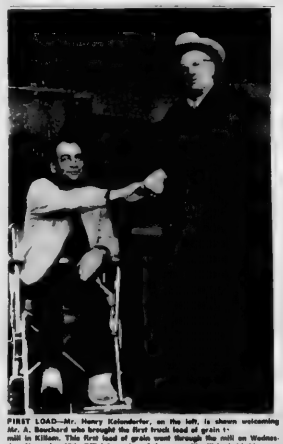
Communion Rails Dedicated At St. John's Anglican

SEDGEWICK — An impressive service took place at St. John's Anglican Church, on Sunday evening, November 14th, when the Venerable Archdeacon V. P. Cole, dedicated the Communion rails presented by The Royal Canadian Legion Branch No. 85, in memory of the fallen in the two world wars.

Members of the Legion were on parade for the service as well as the Ladies Auxiliary and the No. 1752 Sedgewick School Cadet Corps. The Colour party consisted of Legionnaire Fred McKee, David Bonar, and Ray Bottineau. For the duration of the service the colours were placed in the Sanctuary of the Church by the Rector, the Reverend Anthony Steel, and returned to the Legion at its conclusion. The address was given by Archdeacon Cole, who is Rector of St. Thomas Church, Wainwright, and visiting Chaplain to the Wainwright Military Camp.



FIRST LOAD—Mr. Henry Kolenbarber, on the left, is shown welcoming Mr. A. Bouchard who brought the first truck load of grain to the mill in Killam. This first load of grain went through the mill on Wednesday, November 17th. Official opening of the new mill will be held this coming Saturday.

THE THREE TOP CONTENDERS? Who will succeed Lester Pearson as chief of the Conservative party when he retires? Mr. Diefenbaker has already ruled out provincial premiers as possible successors. Strong contenders are former Cabinet members George Hees, left, and E. Davie Fulton, centre. However, they might be snubbed because they both walked out on Mr. Diefenbaker in the past. Reina here are now being placed on Michael Starr, right, who was made a labor minister under Mr. Diefenbaker, and thus became the first Ukrainian to hold a Canadian cabinet post. He's a member for Ontario County.

Killam District Now Has Dial Telephones

KILLAM—The Town of Killam and surrounding district is now operating under the dial system of telephones, which system went into operation at midnight last Saturday.

To acquaint the customers with the new system, an Alberta Government Telephone staff was on hand on November 17th, and attracted a large number of people to the meeting. The town along this line are being converted to the new system as speedily as possible and it is predicted that within two years very few communities will be without dial phones. In fact we are informed that in the near future, direct dialing will be installed.

For the conversion clinic Telephone the AGT had on display working models of their various telephone equipment along with a few of the older models which included the first dial phone used in Canada. The evening started off with an address of welcome by Mayor Hilker. The AGT staff then planned the large crowd with a Skit, following which it was explained how to go about dialing a number, a few hints on telephone manners, a color movie, long distance calling, and rural phones.

Although there was some confusion when the system first went into operation, customers caught on quickly and the system is working ideally.

Young Socreds To Practice For Play

SEDGEWICK — The Sedgewick-Coronation Young Social Creditors met at the home of Neil Lunny, on the 17th for the Nov. meeting.

The treasurer reported a very successful book sale, and a suggestion was made to make this an annual event.

There was further discussion on the provincial and national Young Social Credit convention to be held in Edmonton on Nov. 30-34, and all plans were finalized.

Ray Pettage brought information as to what kind of play we will put on, and it was decided to send for one play book. A motion was made to rent the hall in Sedgewick for all the play practices.

Vice President Doug Munro gave an informative lecture on present day banking and monetary policy. The group will be presented with a short quiz next month.

A combination social and regular meeting is planned for December at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Sorenson. Due to Christmas, the date will be set ahead about a week.

A delicious lunch concluded the interesting meeting.

WINNING SMILE. Diane Landry, 18, of Wanham, is all smiles. No wonder, she's the 1966 Miss Canadel Her reign as Beauty queen began with a royal tour of Norway, Sweden, Germany and France. There were 10 other contestants competing for the Miss Canada trophy.

Done Anything Worth While?

Currently appearing in this paper is a series of advertisements inserted by Calgary Power, naming the winners of awards for deeds of merit, of acts performed beyond the call of duty, acts of heroism, and other obligations performed in the course of every day living. These award winners are all young citizens of Alberta, people who are taking seriously the responsibilities thrust upon them by opportunity or necessity. These advertisements will continue until the end of the current year, and we urge our readers to study them and to see thereby if there isn't someone among their associates who are performing like services. Such young people are worthy of attention, and Calgary Power is determined that they shall get it.

In like manner, the Community Press is convinced that in the area served by it, there are surely young people who deserve recognition for acts performed in line of duty to family, friends and neighbors. It seems almost ridiculous to suppose that this area's young people are less responsive to duty and the needs of others than their counterparts in other sections of the province, and yet in the years that these awards have been given, not a single nomination has come from this area of Alberta.

The Community Press works in co-operation with Calgary Power in this endeavor and will be only too pleased to receive word from anyone who knows of such a worthy young person. All you have to do is get in touch with the editor of this paper, outlining the deed or deeds of the person involved. The Community Press will do the rest. If the nomination is successful, the winner gets a free trip to Calgary in 1966, a cash award and a suitable trophy, besides province-wide publicity. May we hear from you?

Demands On The Private Purse!

The demand for public support to an endless chain of worthy activities has now reached the point where individual contributors are taking a close look at the situation. Hardly a week in the year goes by that some group or individual is not entering our place of business with a request for a donation to a "most worthy cause". Frankly this situation has gotten to the point where most of us are being forced to re-assess charities and sort out the ones we feel most inclined to support. In our opinion, blue ribbon charities seldom get left out of the kitty, and it is time that some situation was evolved in the rural areas, like the method used in cities, where a person or business makes a single contribution to a central fund. This then is distributed to recognized charities on a workable basis. In this way business firms will be able to set a budget. There are altogether too many people knocking on doors and interrupting business activities with requests for donations. Charity is a virtue, we know, but virtue has its limits. An editoral exhorting the public to dig deeper for charity remarks: One of the greatest arguments for giving is that it does the person who gives a great deal of good. We have no personal quibble with that statement, but it doesn't deem to occur to some collectors that many people feel so good now, through giving to three governments, the church, the school, the family, the community groups, that they just can't afford to feel any better.

Canada Needs Men With Ethics!

The November 8th federal election, while a dead issue in fact, is still alive in the minds of the people, and there are those who still maintain it was an unnecessary one. While we cannot concur in this, we have concluded that it was a useless one, in that it settled little or nothing of importance, while emphasizing matters of lesser importance. Most dominent among these is that there is a swing toward socialism, clearly indicated by the upsurge in the popular vote for the N.D.P. If this were not a fact, it will be hard to explain why Social Credit did not do better, a party which stands out foursquare for private enterprise. It also indicated that there is a sharp difference in opinion between the West and the East, with the line being drawn down the Manitoba border. For political purposes Canada is clearly divided in two more than ever before, a situation which will continue until the country gets back to the two-party system. Another conclusion to be drawn from the election is that for the most part people are not inclined to cross party lines, and will vote party no matter what abilities the candidate may have, or lack.

Of the over 1000 candidates who offered their services to the nation, some men and women of noteable ability were severely beaten by candidates of lesser ability, and the prairie provinces are today lamenting the fact that they have no cabinet minister in agriculture which they have come to believe is their right through tradition.

The greatest need in Canada today is to send men to Ottawa who have a sense of ethics. It was recently proposed in Ontario that a code of ethics be set up for people in municipal government, but why go to this bother, if men are going to violate the criminal code, the Ten Commandments and the oath of office. They are surely not going to let a code of ethics stand in their way. Never in the history of Canadian politics has the government and the opposition, and other parties, promised so much to so many from the same people, the taxpayers. There were exortations for the Quebec vote, the Ontario vote, the Maritime vote, the Prairie vote. It is high time we had leaders and members of parliament who seek to unify the nation, for we desperately need someone to fuse us together, something our present leaders seem incapable of doing.

OUR FADING FLAG

There has been quite a bit of talk lately about the pale shade of the new Maple Leaf flag. It seems that for some reason, the companies manufacturing the new flag have failed to produce one that will not fade in the wind and sun. It is estimated that the average life of a flag under the average life of a flag is about 30 days. After that it is an faded it should not be flown. The federal government is supposed to be providing the manufacturers with specific information and regulations providing for a better and longer lasting color.

We think that the color is too weak to begin with. Why not put in the strong and bright red line instead as long in the old Union Jack as the Red Ensign? If the Conservatives or Social Credit form the next government, it may be that more than the color will fade in the new Maple Leaf flag. The New Democratic Party, if elected, might make the flag more red.—Nanaimo News.

CLEANING UP THE HOUSE!

By Ray Argyle

With Prime Minister Pearson moving to shake up his cabinet, and John Diefenbaker showing a willingness to talk about a possible successor, the Canadian political picture took on a new exciting flair this week.

It still was not yet clear, however, whether the post-election housecleaning would bring any drastic change to Liberal and Conservative line-ups.

When the resignation of Walter Gordon as finance minister hit the country with a shock, there were many predictions that a wholesale make-over of the federal cabinet was underway.

The Prime Minister said he did not have any further changes to announce until after the election writs are formally returned early in December.

But the fact that Mr. Pearson, however his words be weighed, is heavily weighted from Ontario and Quebec, doesn't have many alternatives in choosing cabinet personnel.

The guessing as to the future finance minister runs between Trade and Commerce Minister Mitchell Sharp and the newly-elected Robert Winters, who was finance minister in the St. Laurent government.

It's fairly apparent that Mr Winters has prime ministerial ambitions. The post of finance minister has long been a politic-al graveyard and he may not be anxious to take on this assignment. He might prefer to see Mr. Sharp, who has stood up the finance post temporarily, move over to that department permanently so as to leave the trade and commerce department open for him.

Mr. Pearson will have more difficulty filling the other two cabinet posts left open by election defeats — that of Agriculture Minister Henry Hays of Calgary and Veteran Air-Slaughter of Prince Edward Island.

The Prime Minister, however could probably win strong public support if he dumped Guy Favreau, the accident prone ex-justice minister, from his position as president of the privy council. He would also find a sympathetic hearing from the public by replacing State Secretary Maurice Lamontagne, who was involved in the furniture on credit episode last year.

The question is, where does Mr. Pearson go for new talent, even if he did decide to dispense with these political liabilities?

In announcing the Parliament would be called into session Jan. 27th, Mr. Pearson has left himself time to plan strategy and to line up additional talent that might give him a more majority by then.

The cabinet vote remitted in the election of two more Liberal seats, raising government total strength to 131 — two short of a majority. But the Liberals are assured of the support of one Quebec independent, and at the time of writing this column, pressure was being put on Social Creditor Bud Olson of Medicine Hat to bolt to the Liberal Camp to take over the agriculture ministry.

Meanwhile, John Diefenbaker, who talked the day after the election as if he would bring down the government the moment the

New Faces

OTTAWA— Finance Minister Walter Gordon's resignation only three days after the general election that failed to produce for Prime Minister Pearson the majority he wanted, has set in motion a struggle for power between the two wings of the Liberal Party. The struggle has been intensified because the outcome of the election appears to have speeded up the date on which the present leader of the Party may choose to retire.

By resigning as he did the former Finance Minister also put the pressure on at least three other members of the Cabinet. Privy Council President Guy Favreau was shocked by Gordon's action and it immediately stirred up speculation that he would be the next to move out of his front bench seat. The pressure was also on State Secretary Maurice Lamontagne and Postmaster General Rene Tremblay to quit their posts.

The names of two men as front runners for the post of Finance Minister are: Trade and Commerce Minister Mitchell Sharp and Robert Winters, the cabinet minister turned industrialist.

Sharp is acting Finance Minister, until the post is filled. He as a member of Pearson's Cabinet, already is regarded by many at Ottawa as having the inside track.

Robert Winters, retired from politics after he suffered defeat in the Nova Scotia riding of Queens-Lunenburg in 1957. He had held several cabinet posts in Mr. St. Laurent's Liberal administration, and is regarded as a favourite of business and investment circles for the finance job.

At his farewell press conference, Mr. Gordon was asked if his going would mean that the "philosophical right wing" of the Liberal Party would take over and ditch his economic policies. He said he was confident his policies would be carried on and pointed to the Prime Minister's letter accepting his resignation and key paragraph.

It read: "I also want to express my deep appreciation for what you have accomplished as Minister of Finance in putting into effect fiscal policies which have done much to bring about and maintain the expansion and prosperity Canada at present enjoys: and for your effort to ensure that Canadians maintain the maximum control possible over their own economic and industrial development as essential to the development of the nation. You know that I share this objective with you."

It appeared that the Prime Minister wanted the Gordon policies carried forward. If that is the case then the choice for Finance Minister will be probably Mitchell Sharp, rather than Robert Winters.

Mr. Winters is looked upon rightly or wrongly, as one of the "old guard right wing". He was a protege of the late C. D. Howe and it was Howe that got Winters into politics in the first place. The right wing element of the Party that has been pushing the social welfare programs forward at a rapid rate do not look too kindly on the idea of Winters taking over the finance portfolio. They would view that move as a "throw-back" to the kind of Liberalism that was rebuffed against in 1958 and 1963.

Mr. Sharp on the other hand was sympathetic to some of Gordon's policies. But, he did not go along entirely with protectionist ideas calculated to discourage foreign investment.

Mitchell Sharp has worked in the Cabinet and has helped carry forward some of the economic ideas the Gordon advocated and stirred up opposition when he appeared to endorse. Consequently, Sharp will likely be more favourably considered for the finance post than Winters who has been out of the political stream for nearly a decade.

This could bring on a first rate battle for power behind the scenes. Those swinging the Party left of centre will resist mightily any attempt by the more moderate thinking groups to run down the centre, or slightly right of centre.

The battle for power is not just for the finance portfolio but for the future leadership of the Party. There is no doubt that if Sharp gets the nod as Finance Minister his stock will rise rapidly as a possible new leader. Should Winters be Finance Minister then it will give him a boost upwards for that day which is coming—and coming sooner now than many Liberals had thought prior to November 8—when Mr. Pearson decides to retire.

Meantime the pressures will build up again on his principal opponent John Diefenbaker to step down gracefully. The vigorous and hard fought campaign succeeded in re-establishing Diefenbaker in the Conservative Party as the leader than he was before the election.

But he failed to regain power. And with the Liberals winning 131 seats his great ambition to stage a comeback and once again be Prime Minister has been thwarted.

As the weeks and months pass the ambitious men within the Conservative party will once again start manoeuvring to try and bring about the retirement of the leader. Some are hoping even now, that he will decide to call it quits in the very near future. But others say that they know not "the chief". He is convinced that he and he alone was able to bring about the situation where the Liberals were denied their majority. He apparently has no desire to retire and is eager and anxious to "have at" his political opponents in Parliament.

But most say Mr. Diefenbaker will want to stay on indefinitely in office the battling in Ottawa is that within a year or two a leadership convention will be in the cards. The anti-Diefenbaker element within the Party's ranks in Parliament has been strengthened considerably with George Hees and Davie Fulton. Both will make determined drives to win the national leadership of the Party.

Marlene Anna Koehli and Dwight Sydney Smith-Gander Married At Daysland

The Knox United Church in Daysland was the scene of a double-ring ceremony on October 23rd, uniting in marriage Marlene Anna, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Koehli of Daysland, and Dwight Sydney, eldest son of Mrs. Leonard Smith-Gander and the late Mr. Leonard Smith-Gander of Strome. Rev. McNeil of Daysland officiated and the organist was Mrs. Lila Winchester. "The Wedding Prayer" was sung by Mrs. McNeil during the ceremony.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, looked radiant in a full-length gown of silk organza, with lily-point sleeves. The neckline was decorated with seeded pearls. A shoulder-length veil was held in place by a crown of seeded pearls, and the Bride carried a cascade bouquet of red roses.

The attendants were Miss Dorothy McHargue of Edmonton, as maid of honor, and Miss Marilyn Larson of Edmonton, both cousins of the bride. They wore cocktail-length sheath dresses of yellow peau de Soie with detachable overskirts, and carried bouquets of white carnations tipped with yellow.

The groom's attendants were Basil Smith-Gander of Edmonton, and Ken Jacobson of Sedgewick. Ushers were Jack Williams of Strome, cousin of the groom, and Ronald Kandel of Edmonton, brother of the bride.

The bride's mother chose a three-piece red suit with black accessories and corsage of white roses.

The groom's mother wore a three-piece teal blue double knit suit with white and black accessories and corsage of white roses. The bride's grandmother, Mrs. Fritz Carlson, wore a dark turquoise dress and corsage of pink carnations.

A reception for 85 guests was held in the basement of the church which was catered to by the United Church Ladies' Aid. The head table was centred by a three-tiered wedding cake made by the bride's mother, and decorated by Mrs. [illegible].

The master of ceremonies, was Eric Carlson and the best man. The bride was given by Fred Koehli, to which the groom ably responded.

The bride donned a yellow crepe suit with brown accessories and wore a corsage of yellow roses.

The happy couple will reside in Strome.

parliament open, indicated an unusual willingness to discuss a possible successor as P-C leader.

He said in a statement that he thought whoever would replace him should have long parliamentary experience. This apparently rules out, at least in Mr Diefenbaker's opinion, the suitability of a provincial premier for the job.

George Hees and Davie Fulton most often mentioned as future Tory leaders, still have the stigma of having deserted the Chief at his most desperate hour.

On the other hand, two of Mr. Diefenbaker's favorites in the House have been Michael Starr of Oshawa, his ex-labor minister and currently Tory House leader, and the hard-hitting Yukon member, Erik Nielsen.

As the country settled down for a respite from politics, the indications were that Canadians are going to continue to be confronted with fast-breaking political developments for some time.

SUGAR AND SPICE

by Bill Smiley

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

Addressing a group of high school teachers the other night, I was recalling how I entered the ... ish teaching game, business, vocation, profession or racket — what you will it depends on who you are — purely by accident.

I had brought my family to this town one Sunday to have a look at the sights, as we hadn't been here before.

On the way out of town, we drove around the side streets to admire the fine homes. "That's odd," I said to my wife. "There's a big, new factory smack in the middle of the residential section. They don't usually allow that."

Then I saw the roadblock, out in front of the sprawling, one-storey factory. There was a grim gent beside it, well dressed but with a sort of wild glint in his eye. He flagged me down.

I stopped. He came over to the car. "Can you use out of at least one eye?" he queried. I assured him that I had 4th vision, or something of the sort. I thought it was some kind of freaky, plain-clothes police check. He kind you run into when you've left your driving license in your other pants.

"Ever been in a university?", he shot at me. I said I'd been to Oxford. I remember spending a whole weekend there during the war, waiting for a Land Army girl who never did show up.

He brightened considerably. "Have you any contagious diseases?", was the next question. "Like leprosy?" I told him I was as sound as any man in my condition could be.

Beaming now, he went on with the questionnaire. "And you don't drink, smoke, play the horses or chase women. Right?"

I started to point out that I did all of these whenever possible, but not all the time, and not all at once. But he didn't wait for me. He took the car door open and me by the arm, and was hustling me towards what log looked like a prison. I thought I was under arrest.

When we got inside, he shoved me into a chair, and I waited, fearfully, for the bright light in the face, and the rubber hose. But he fooled me. He shook a cambodian under my nose and snarled, "Sign there." I signed, wondering what had become of Magna Carta, Habeas Corpus and my family, out in the car.

It was not until he offered to show me the gymnasium and the cafeteria that I realized the factory was a high school, and that I had just experienced the hard sell on teachers.

However, it wasn't much of a switch for me. I knew that the jump into teaching, from big industrialist, shoe salesman or short-order cook has been a traumatic experience for some people. You can see them say day, tottering white-faced toward the staff room, after a double period with 16's, the terror of the school.

But I had little difficulty in making the adjustment. After all, I had been a weekly newspaper editor-in-chief, sports editor, night-editor, cub reporter, and the part-time telling people things they don't listen to, and urging them to do things they don't want to do. I found these invaluable training for my teaching career.

And I must admit that things have gone well. In three years, I bought my way up to department headship. Oh, it took a lot of solid, night-and-morning, coffee-buying for the principal, and the fact that they couldn't get any body else for the job. But I made it.

And now I have my own little empire: a dozen or so English teachers who are so in awe of me that they never borrow more than $10; an assistant department head who hangs on my every word, and then contradicts it; and the thrill of attending department heads' meetings, of being on the inside, where the big decisions are made.

Like what are we gonna do with kids who carve "Herb Loves Elsie" on the desks.

Egg Deficiency Payment

A deficiency payment of 4.3 cents per dozen for eggs was announced today by Agriculture Minister Harry Hays.

The payment applies to eggs marketed in the 1964-65 support year ended September 30.

Mr. Hays said payments to egg producers are expected to total about $2 million. For a producer with approximately 500 hens, the payment will amount to about $172.

The weighted national average price received by producers for Grade A Large plus eggs in the support year was 35.7 cents per dozen — 4.3 cents below the support price of 34 cents.

To be eligible for the deficiency payment, producers must be registered with the Agricultural Stabilization Board and have sold eggs through approved egg grading stations, or be registered producers who do their own grading and sell directly to retail outlets.

The payment applies to Grade A Extra Large, Grade A Large, and Grade A Medium size eggs, to a maximum of 4,000 dozen. Producers shipping less than 67 dozen eggs in the support year are not eligible.

It is estimated that the 4,000 dozen ceiling is higher than a full year's production of more than 99 per cent of Canada's egg producers, based on census figures.

The Rehabilitation Board is mailing to all registered producers a claim form with instructions for filing for payment. Producers not registered with the Board may make application for registration by completing a section of the claim form which may be obtained at the Local Board Office, and from district supervisors of the Poultry Division, Canada Department of Agriculture.

NOTE: IN A SERIES ON MONEY MANAGEMENT

The Principles of Design (form "Your Home Furnishing Dollar" —H.F.C.)

The principles of design are the guides for combining line, form, texture and colour to create beauty. These principles — proportion, balance, emphasis, rhythm and harmony — apply to all forms of art. We must remember therein in selecting and arranging furnishings for for attractive rooms.

Proportion

Proportion is the relationship of parts to each other and to the whole. In a well-proportioned room the size and shape of furnishings are attractively related to each other and to the size and shape of the room. A good sense of proportion can help you to achieve interesting furniture arrangements and to make the best use of available space.

To create pleasing proportions in: (small and room sized rooms)

select furnishings with slim, simple lines (sofas, floor coverings and wall treatments in solid colours or small, subtle designs) . . . contrast in light or medium grayed tones. Avoid large furniture, bold patterns and bright colours . . too many furnishings, patterns or colours . . . furniture arrangements that divide the room.

—large rooms select medium to large sized furniture and accessories with clearly defined lines . . bold, dramatic patterns . . bright, clear or deep colours . . a variety of textures. Arrange furniture to divide space attractively and to define activity areas.

—high ceiling rooms use darker colours on the ceiling than on walls . . select furnishings and treatments with horizontal lines . . place important objects and interesting effects low in the room.

—long narrow rooms use room dividers . . mirrors on side walls . . contrasting colours or emphasis on end walls. Arrange furniture to divide the length of the room.

Balance

Balance is a type of order. It results when furnishings are arranged around a central point to provide equal interest on each side. You can balance in rooms through an orderly distribution of heavy and light furniture . . high and low furniture . . light and dark colours . . bright and dull colours . . warm and cool colours . . smooth and rough textures . . plain and patterned surfaces. There are two types of balance.

Formal balance is achieved when the items on either side of a centre are equal. The items may be identical such as two candlesticks on either side of a centrepiece. Or they may be different but of equal importance such as a sofa on one side and two chairs on the opposite side of a fireplace Formal balance is quiet, dignified and exact but, if used excessively, it may result in a monotonous room.

Informal balance is achieved when the items on either side of the centre are unequal in importance and are placed at different distances from the centre. A large piece of furniture placed near the centre of a wall can be balanced by a smaller object placed further from the centre on the opposite side Informal balance is more difficult to arrange than formal, but it creates more interest. It is casual and friendly but, if used to extreme, it may cause a disorganized, restless feeling.

Emphasis

Emphasis is the arrangement of furnishings in a room to carry the eye first to the centre of interest and then to every other detail in order of its importance. To use the principle of emphasis in designing a room, decide first how important you want to make each item or area and then arrange furnishings accordingly. You may find it helpful to list everything in the room according to the attention you want it to receive as in the following exam.

Primary Centre of Interest: fireplace.

Secondary Centres of Interest: Conversational grouping of sofa, chairs, coffee table, lamps. Recreational grouping of radio, phonograph, game table, chairs.

Details of Major Importance: wall treatment, draperies, pictures.

Rhythm

Rhythm is organized movement which leads the eye in an orderly manner from one object to another in a design. You can use rhythm in decorating by repeating lines, forms, colours, patterns and textures. A rectangular shaped picture over a horizontal chest creates rhythm through repetition of forms and lines. The same colour used in draperies, on a chair and in throw pillows creates rhythm through repetition of colours.

Harmony

Harmony is the end result of applying the other art principles — proportion, balance, emphasis and rhythm — to a design. If in the selection and arrangement of agreeable parts to produce a pleasing whole. In a harmonious room, the furnishings are of different but related sizes, shapes, colours and textures combined and arranged to express variety and unity.

"The Alberta Commercial Corporation helped us to expand"

When credit was unavailable through regular financial facilities this firm received monetary assistance from the Department of Industry and Development through the Alberta Commercial Corporation. Aid was made available for inventory financing which included purchase of raw materials or standard equipment components; for financing production equipment and for land and building financing to enlarge facilities. The Department also assisted this firm through the Alberta Bureau of Statistics with information on present and potential markets and the availability of materials.
Services of the Department of Industry and Development extend beyond financial and statistical assistance to established firms. The counselling services of the Industrial Development Board encourage the formation of industrial committees in various centres and supply information to firms outside Alberta to promote the immigration of new industry.
By providing financial, statistical and counselling assistance the Department of Industry and Development plays an important role in the economic progress of Alberta.

SECOND in the Best All Round Newspaper Competition.

These Awards were won in competition with all other Alberta Weekly Newspapers in the 1,000 to 2,000 circulation class and were announced at the annual convention held this year at Lethbridge.

Mr. Art W. Scotty, editor of the Community press, is shown hanging the first place editorial award on his office wall beside one of last years awards.

Photography Award

In competition with all other weekly newspapers in the Province of Alberta, the Press received the second place award for Feature Photography.

This award is presented by Canadian Western Natural Gas Co. and Northwestern Utilities Ltd. for achievement in photography.

A picture on the front page of the Community Press last spring showing two wild deer and a small boy standing together in a pool of water was the picture which won second place award. First place was won by Stettler Independent, one of the larger weeklies in the Province.

Memory Lane

(By Mrs. F. M. Cantlon, Hardisty, Alberta)

CAR RIDES IN THE EARLY YEARS

In looking through some old snaps recently I came across one which depicted an old "Model T Ford" touring car—with my late husband, his brother and wife and a friend.

What nostalgic memories race through my mind when I view these old scenes—this particular snap was taken forty three years ago—in 1922. From the smug expressions on his face, one can assume my husband was quite proud to what then was considered a real "classy" car. Many were the rides which I enjoyed in that same car. There were no paved Hi-ways through-out the country then, as all you old-timers know—just prairie trails with a strip of grass down the center.

You will re-call, too, the cars were enclosed then as they were later and are now. Just pieces of imitation leather with strips of isinglass for windows which could be snapped onto the top and sides with strong dome fasteners.

When it rained or the weather became cold these curtains were fastened all around as securely as possible. But if the sing glass was cracked or broken, and the dome fasteners became weak so they became un-fastened in places—those curtains would flap and blow out-ward in the wind and rain—thus proving very inadequate.

Or if the top—which was also made of poor material had acquired a hole or two and the rain poured in—we were always thankful for the blanket or two which we always took with us for just such emergencies.

Believe it or not, we always experienced a real thrill when the driver "Speeded up" and we would go bumping along those old rutted trails at the breath-taking (?) speed of 25 to 30 Miles per hour.

Occasionally, along those long lonely prairie trails a badger would decide to dig a hole right in the rut. With tail grass on either side and down the middle one wasn't apt to see the hole until we were too close to it to slow up or stop. I re-call one time we were speeding along at a good rate—possibly the ultimate 25 or 30 Miles per hour —when we hit such a hole. WHAM —Down came the top on our heads —it had become un-hooked from where the top was hooked onto the wind-shield.

As I gaze at this faded snap, I re-call the times we would drive out to a lake to pick berries—or maybe just for a day of picnic-ing. There were several hills along the way and every time we came to one—out of every adult passenger—except the driver—would tumble and PUSH with all our might until we reached the top. Then with the car still moving along slowly, we would all pile in again, only to repeat this procedure at the next hill. Incidentally, this was necessary in just about every mud-hole, too.

We thought nothing of this—frankly, I think we all more or less expected to have to do this—but we were young and took it all as a matter of course. We always looked forward to every car ride—even knowing there was a possibility of having to push up hills and through mud holes, become soaked in the rain, maybe have a flat or two—even so, a car ride was a novelty and a pleasure to us.

We tried not to be away from home in the car after dark as, unlike our cars of today the lights were anything but adequate—to put-tably if, and when we had to slow down, and THAT was when one NEEDED a better light than ordinarily needed. Of course, there were no "Dimmers" either. So if we were out after dark we usually stopped on the headlights in case we met another car. This method certainly did not help to light the trails up, so we had to drive even slower than other-wise.

Remember how hard it was to get these old relics started in the cold weather? When our old "Henry Ford" simply refused to show any sign of co-operating at these times, we would get old "Dot"—the children's pony, who was always near by—into action. This happened so often that when she stood in front of the car and knew every-thing was in readiness, without being told she would "Lay low in the collar," dig her toes in and start running down the road pulling the car. As soon as she heard the motor take hold she would step of her own accord. She was called out-ward in the wind and rain—thus proving very inadequate.

Or if the top—which was also made of poor material had acquired a hole or two and the rain poured in—we were always thankful for the blanket or two which we always took with us for just such emergencies

AGRICULTURAL LIVESTOCK MEETING AT KILLAM!

A meeting will be held in Killam to discuss Agricultural Price Fluctuations as Affecting Buying and Selling, and also the Economics of Cattle Production. Mr Roger Keay, Marketing Specialist and B. Heckett, Agr. Economist from the Farm Economics Branch, will be the speakers.

This meeting will be held in the Killam Co-op Hall on Monday afternoon, November 29th starting at 1:30 p.m. The buying and selling of livestock is a vital part of the livestock business. It can mean the difference between making a profit or a loss in a livestock venture. Plan to attend this meeting and to hear what the Economists suggest to overcome the risks of buying and selling of livestock.

This meeting is sponsored by the Killam and District Board of Trade and the Dept of Agriculture. Coffee and doughnuts will be served.

BRAND NOTICES!

L. Brinkhurst, Brand Recorder with the Alberta Dept. of Ag., says that livestock owners who want to maintain their brands must return their renewal application forms promptly. Anyone who fails to do this runs the risk of having his brand cancelled.

Brand owners are also reminded to notify the Brand Office of any change of address to ensure that they get their renewal notices.

Mr Brinkhurst reports that there are about 37,000 cattle brands and about 4000 horse brands being used in Alberta at the present time. So far this year over 1300 new cattle brands have been registered, and about 700 transferred. During the same period about 100 new horse brands were issued and about 70 transferred.

Since last December 9000 cattle brand and 1000 horse brand renewals have been sent out to livestock owners. All brands have to be renewed every four years and most of the notices are sent out between September and December. Renew your brand promptly upon receipt of your renewal notice.

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

BULLETIN:

WAINWRIGHT GIRL HONORED FOR DEVOTION TO FAMILY

At fifteen years of age, Judith Rutledge has proved herself a worthy Junior Citizen by her selfless care of and devotion to her family. Judith's mother, a courageous victim of MS health, is now confined to a wheel chair.

For over four years Judith, the only girl in a family of six children, has cheerfully taken over the cooking, baking, canning, freezing and laundry in the ranch home. Her days are busy with outside work. Judith is also responsible for the care of her younger brothers.

This heavy load of responsibility has not prevented Judith from doing well in school. She also finds time to be an active member of the 4-H Greenshields Beef Club.

We congratulate Judith. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspapers' Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility companies.

This is one of a series of Junior Citizen Award announcements. Our special thanks to L. D'Albertanson, Editor of the Wainwright Star-Chronicle and to Judith's nominator, Mrs. D. K. Roach of Wainwright.

AMISK—The afternoon of Sunday, November 7th, was a happy occasion in the Amisk Community Hall when it filled to capacity with relatives and friends who gathered to help Mr. and Mrs. Ray Anholt celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary. Ethel and Ray were married on November 8th, 1940 in Edmonton by Rev. Argue. They have three daughters, Joyce (Mrs. Gordon De Beer) Carol and Janet. They were hosts for this happy event and assisted by a number of relatives and friends.

Mrs Anholt from Edmonton, a nephew of Ray's, was master of ceremonies for a good home-talented program. He also did considerable reminiscing. After the program, the guests of honor along with their wedding attendants, Mrs. Vernon Sampson, acting proxy for her sister Viola and Elmer Jacobs, with other members of the family, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon De Beer, Carol and Janet, Ann Hnik, were seated at a table adorned by a lovely anniversary cake made by Mrs. Elmer Jacobs and decorated by Mrs. Bertha Chapman. RULE BREAKER?

By Bert Odland

Are we becoming a nation of rule breakers?

My agents report that many of us do not "clear cover before climbing," "keep still out "not along dotted line." While other more rebellious souls absolutely refuse to record a broadcast food item according to the instructions.

Once I even did not "use handcraft." So, you see, I'm not the only offender. However, there are some rules I swear by and bust my britches to fulfill.

One of these rules is to service the equipment we sell. Lesser ale conditioning and maintaining equipment is foreign to the mindset of servicing . . . but the lower is still outlined to have customers standing behind the product. We do. And so does the Lennox company.

Another rule is not to skimp on quality. This isn't self-righteousness. It's just good business. We expect to remain in business around here for quite some time . . . . to do so successfully we cannot give short measure of quality.

Another rule: no high pressure selling. The needs when operators have sort of worked the furnace business over. But we are not all like that.

It all adds up to one rule. And that is to satisfy the customer. It's a rule we never want to break. Try us. Phone soon.

But be sure to "listen for the dial tone" . . . . and keep your mouth within 2 inches of the mouthpiece!

Stubble Burning And Wild Oat Control

The Alberta Department of Agriculture does not recommend burning stubble to control wild oats.

W. Lobay, provincial Supervisor of Soils and Weed Control, stresses that stubble burning will never eliminate wild oats. They can be controlled by such proven methods as delayed-seeding, post-seeding, cultivation and the use of herbicides.

It need be remembered, says Mr. Lobay, that in badly infested fields there are usually several bushels of wild oats per acre buried in the ground. These are not affected by fire. Consequently, even if most seeds were destroyed on the surface, the wild oats would not be eliminated from the field. The advantage gained, and we cannot see any, says Mr. Lobay, would be far outweighed by the loss of organic matter in the soil.

Mr. Lobay reports that wild oats and other weed seeds were only very slightly affected by fire in an experiment where the ground had been sprayed with oil and distillate before it was burned. Naturally, under these conditions, the heat was much greater and more likely to burn the seeds than it would be in the case of ordinary stubble burning. Since most wild oats are on the bare ground and rises, at most the fire would only singe the stems without doing any real harm to the seed.

With soil erosion problems continuing to erupt from time to time, Mr. Lobay points out that nobody can afford to overlook the value of properly incorporated straw as a means of soil conservation. Heavy straw can usually be successfully incorporated with the proper implements. An application of nitrogen fertilizer on the stubble will provide quicker decomposition of the straw and maintain crop yields the following year, says Mr. Lobay.

The right of the chartered banks to issue bank notes was cancelled in 1945 and since that time only the Bank of Canada has been permitted to issue paper money in Canada.

Accounts and pay sheets as presented were approved for payment.

Temperature Varies As Old Man Winter Changes Mind

Winter has been in the district for several weeks, but didn't make itself really felt until last week.

On Monday evening the district received two inches of snow which brought out the snow shovels. Sidewalks were just nicely cleaned and another three inches arrived Thursday morning.

Temperatures dipped to the fifteen to twenty below mark and everyone realized that winter had really arrived.

By the weekend the weather had moderated and temperatures were up close to the melting point and the sun shone brightly.

Now at press time of the man winter looks like he might be going to change his mind again.

Battle River League Starts Dec. 13 or 15

The annual organizational meeting of the Battle River Hockey League was held recently over at Wainwright, at which time regular business was transacted and preparations made for the new season.

Results of the meeting were that the new President and Secretary from Wainwright were returned to office for another year.

Two leagues this year will start on December 13th or 15th depending on the conditions, etc. The same six teams which comprised the league last year, with Sedgewick replacing the championship. These teams are, Wainwright, Irma, Viking, Daysland, Killam and Hardisty.

There had been some indications that Vermilion would seek entry, as well as Forestburg, but nothing resulted. It is felt however, that for another year Forestburg will make a definite bid for entry.

The schedule will soon be drawn up and printed, and with new players in the area, it looks like a good season for the B. R. League.

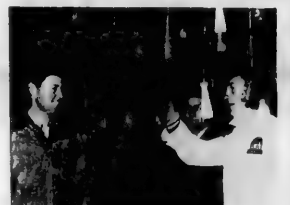
Feed Mill Officially Opened Saturday



THIS IS HOW IT WORKS—An employee of the new Feed Mill at Killam demonstrates how to a customer, how the automatic scales work. This was one group of visitors who were taken on a tour of the Mill at the opening last Saturday.

KILLAM — A large crowd was on hand at the new, modern Feed Mill at Killam on the morning of December 27th at 10 a.m., and were conducted on a tour of the plant and a demonstration of feed rolling. From this tour it was learned that the Rolling Mill has a capacity of from 12 to 16 tons per hour with the Mill having a daily capacity of 175 tons, which can be processed in an eight hour daily shift. Built by Elie Construction of Red Deer, the plant, one of the most modern in Alberta, presents a nice appearing as well as a practical addition to the Town and district.

Mr. Curly Gurlock acted as M.C. for the occasion, and introduced the Board of Directors, Henry Kolendorfer, president; Bill George, secretary; Bill Larson, Bill George and Vernon Kolendorfer. Introduced also was Mr. Alex Ellis, contractor, who gave a short address on the Mill and its construction. Others introduced were C. K. Darkham, manager of the Alberta-B. C. division of Sell's of Canada, and Mr. A. E. Edwards, Alberta Government District Agriculturist.

Mr Andrew Sorensen, an old-time resident of the Killam district, had the honor of cutting the ribbon to declare the new Mill officially opened. Mr. Sorensen gave a short history of the progress made in the Killam and district since he first arrived many years ago.

A noon luncheon was served in the community hall, where several feed samples and animal health products were given out as prizes. A short and interesting film, 'Meat on the Move,' a documentary film, was shown, and Mr. R. Olson, Animal Specialist of Swifts, spoke on livestock feeding. Mr. Darkham also spoke, mentioning the increasing potential of livestock feeding in the area. He said the new Mill was one of the finest in the country. A draw for a Hereford Heifer was won by Mr. Fred Sorken.

An invitational banquet was held in the evening, with Curly Gurlock as M. C. He introduced Mayor G. Hilker, who welcomed those present on behalf of the Town, and congratulated the sponsors on the erection of the Mill. Tony Schneider, chairman of the agricultural committee of the Board of Trade, gave greetings from that organization, and Mr. Bill George, Mill Director, thanked everyone who attended the opening and helped in any way.

The Mill is now open for business to accomodate livestock feeders of the Killam district and surrounding areas.

Safe Driving Week!

It isn't something to be exactly proud of, but Canadian Safety Council contends that it is possible to reduce the highway death toll to fewer than fifty during the special Safe Driving Week from December 1 to 7. However when you consider from available statistics that during the last half of 1964, the weekly death toll was 107, it appears as a worthy objective. The nine year average for deaths during Safe Driving Week is 57, with last year showing 61 traffic deaths. If, this year the figure is reduced to 56, it will be a worthy achievement. Safe Driving Week begins at midnight on November 30th and ends at midnight on December 7th. It is a good time to put your driving to the test, for if traffic deaths can be reduced during this one week, it can also be done every week throughout the year. Keep yourself informed at all times, for an informed Canadian public can bring effective results. This country's 10,000,000 voters may not agree on who shall represent them in governing the country, but they can agree that death on the highway is ignominious and that injury through a road crash can mean a living death.

In 1961 the average insurance claim paid out was $361; In 1964 this figure jumped to $437 with more than ten claims being paid out for every 100 vehicles insured. A direct result of this was that claim costs rose 7 percent, insurance costs rose 5 percent and will probably rise another 5 percent this year. But aside from all this, can Canada afford road accidents? If unsafe acts can be reduced, accidents can be reduced, injuries lessened and deaths curtailed.

But Safe Driving Week will be ineffective without public support. December with its holiday season is always a target for increased police vigilance, and protection of the public from its own mistakes. The program deserves strong, active support, and every assistance from the driving public. In this respect more and more Canadians should take a close look at those persons who invade the privacy of others by drinking and then attempting to drive motor vehicles. When you drink and drive you are guilty of a criminal act. The proof of this act is difficult sometimes, but before too long there will be a public demand for measures which will overcome the objections and opposition of these selfish and misguided people who harp about self-discrimination and the sanctity of the rights of the individual. In the face of the growing death and injury caused by drivers who drink and drinkers who drive, there must be a public outcry. The holiday season is coming and with it the threat which can cause ruin. Don't take a chance.

Who Is The Delinquent?

". . . . . most delinquency is bred in the slums where young people not have real access to the ladders that lead to social betterment." So writes one of America's most prominent Social Workers.

We are alarmed about the steady increase in juvenile delinquency. The rise in delinquency is not just quantitative. The types of delinquent acts seems to be increasingly sadistic.

As a society, we have not been able to decide the questions of who is responsible for delinquency, the child or his parents. The argument ranges from "Beat the kids" to "Jail the parents." Investigations in the last twenty years have clearly established the connection between the personality of parents and the deliquency of children. The Gueck delinquency prediction scale is one of the most famous studies of this.

As the studies of delinquency continue, however, questions of the use of such delinquent personality studies are being tested. The sociologist interested in human adjustment problems is asking other questions. Views as represented by prominent social workers are linking community social conditions with delinquency. Housing, economic opportunity, racial issues are appearing to be major factors in the development of delinquency.

It is now evident that we cannot just sit back and blame delinquency on parents. If delinquency is a social disease resulting from unhealthy community conditions, we all become responsible for delinquency. We must then ask: How am I contributing to delinquency? What must I do to work towards the building of the healthy community? The specific answers to these questions will include a shift in our view of community planning, education and taxation.

There's A Bell Ringing!

One of the most widely read books of all time is "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire." Written in 1788 by Edward Gibbon, it sets forth five basic reasons why that civilation withered and died. these were:

The undermining of the dignity and sanctity of the home, which is the basis for human society.

Higher and higher taxes; the spending of public money for free bread and circuses for the populace.

The mad craze for pleasure; sports becoming every year more exciting, more brutal, more immoral.

The building of great armaments when the real enemy was within — the decay of individual responsibility.

The decay of religion; faith fading into mere form, losing power to guide the people.

It vaguely rings a bell, doesn't it?—The Mountaineer.

Editor Community Press
Sedgewick, Alberta

Dear Sir:

I think you and I attended S.H.S. at the same time, belonged to a really good basketball team and the best Army Cadet Corps in the area. After some 40 years, I returned to Sedgewick two years ago to see what I would remember and I assure you it was an experience and sensation impossible to put into words (for other than an editor at least). I then drove around again this past summer during a vacation period spent in Edmonton; wanted to see Sedgewick in winter and sampled again. The first trip back I did make contact with Mr. Gascoyne (Whit) in the old home, and tried to see J. G. Murray an old family friend, but unsuccessfully. This past visit I managed to see the Mayor, the big Smith Boy, Howard. It was Thurston who was a chum of mine in the bygone days.

I purchased a copy of your paper while in town, and am enclosing a check for a year's subscription. Was particularly interested in your "Memory Lane" column. It was indeed interesting. Do you by any chance have back numbers of these articles available.

My wife and I are ardent collectors of old music boxes and have a fine collection of instruments in all things of yesteryear. I'm hoping some day to get my hands on the old steam tractor and threshing engine. An enclosing an article in our company paper about the music boxes which may be of interest to you. Just last week I was able to find an old Atwater-Kent 3-dial radio with horn type speaker. This is an exact model of the one which I remember my folks buying from the Richardson Boys in Sedgewick when I was knee-hi to a grasshopper. Must close for now. Looking forward to the Community Press. —Yours truly, Chas. Bridges.

Editor's Note—We often wondered what ever happened to Charlie, and now we learn that he is head of financing, training and Yard for international Nickel Co. at their Port Colborne, Ontario plant. Charlie's parents farmed and were in business here many years ago, and many old-timers will recall Mr. and Mrs. Jack Bridges. Nice to hear from you Charlie.

PREMIER CALLS FOR TOTAL CENTENNIAL INVOLVEMENT

Premier E. C. Manning has called upon the people of Alberta for total involvement in all celebrations to observe the Centennial of Confederation in Canada in 1967. In a message issued from his office Mr. Manning said:

"1967, Albertans will join with their fellow Canadians in observing the one-hundredth birthday of their country. It is our hope that each and every resident of this province takes an active part in these celebrations.

"Many features and a wide range of activities are being planned now to emphasize in the minds of all of us the importance of this occasion. It is not simply an arbitrary date on a calendar proclaimed for the sake of festivities's sake. It is rather a time when we all can pause to remember and take keen pride in the contributions of those Canadians who have preceded us. Each and every one of them has given something of himself to help make Canada what it is today — a young, proud country, full of promise for the future, and achievement that deserves to persevere for generations to come.

"Our participation in the many events — local, provincial and national — will demonstrate to ourselves our commitment to making our country's second century a period of growth and expansion that will enhance our reputation as one of the world's most progressive lands.

"I commend to you personal participation in the Centennial observances of your community, your province and your country, as a good investment in the future."—Vermilion Standard.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

The Press Cools

OTTAWA—There's a sense of strain these days between the press and the Pearson Government as the Prime Minister works to rebuild his Cabinet after the rebuff he suffered at the hands of the voters.

It isn't anything like the cold hostility which existed between parts of the press gallery and the final days of the Diefenbaker Government. At least, not yet.

But Mr. Pearson has shown resentment and displeasure at the reporters who dog his footsteps — as it is their job to do — as he tries unhappily to work his way through the problems posed by cabinet building.

The Prime Minister called the Nov. 8 election in defiance of the opinion of even the newspapers which most faithfully support the Government. He has since had to endure their "told-you-so" editorials.

And the fact that it is taking him a month or more to reconstruct his Cabinet has been contrasted with his election-time speeches asking for a majority to meet the great and urgent tasks confronting Canada. According to this line of editorial comment, Mr. Pearson has forgotten about the urgency and yielded to a prolonged fit of the sulks.

These things can't have improved the Prime Minister's temper but coolness between the press and the Liberal Government has been building up for a long time.

Mr. Pearson came into office on a wave of favourable press comment but the "honeymoon" usually enjoyed by a new government didn't last long. It ended when the first Government budget showed that this was not a "government of all the talents" as some commentators had called it. From then on the Liberal administration had to fight its way on its own.

The Gordon Budget was followed by the twists and turnings over the Canada Pension Plan and finally by the scandals of a year ago. All these episodes hurt the reputation of the government and there were cabinet ministers inclined to blame the press—especially in relation to the scandals in which some of the most damaging revelations were dug out by eager-beaver reporters.

Mr. Pearson is on excellent terms with most of the individuals among the 120 members of the Parliamentary Press Gallery. At times, the Tories have suspected that this has turned Liberal Gallery members into "Pearson pussy cats".

But whatever their personal feelings, press gallery members have a job to do. And it's no secret that the past three years of Liberal Government have orchestrated some of the reserves of goodwill in the Gallery.

During the election campaign, the travelling press corps (aboard the Diefenbaker train a much happier, more convivial place than the "great iron bird" as the Pearson plane was dubbed. This was an abrupt change from previous campaigns.

The Pearson entourage was edgy and jumpy, inclined to argue with reporters over crowd estimates. The Great Tape Recorder Caper—when Mr. Pearson was recorded on tape as saying an election was imminent unless he got a majority and then taped apparently saying that he had made no such statement—didn't improve matters.

First post-election dust-up between Pearson and the press was after the first post-election cabinet meeting, when the Prime Minister was confronted with a struggling mob of reporters in the corridor on the way to his office.

"This isn't very nice," he told them. "I have to push my way to my office. This isn't a football game."

After the next cabinet meeting, he slipped out the back way and sent an aide for his overcoat. And before the third, he had railed and corridor press conferences.

The executive of the press gallery was told by Mr. Pearson's press secretary, Richard O'Hagan, that in future the corridor would be "off limits" before, during and immediately after cabinet meetings. The regular quarrels in the building would enforce the order.

Instead of meeting the Prime Minister after cabinet meetings in the hallway the press would meet him in more dignity and comfort in a press room set aside for the purpose. Sometimes the briefing would be done by Mr. O'Hagan instead of Mr. Pearson.

At the first test of this system, the Prime Minister appeared and fenced with reporters over his Cabinet changes which he said would be "extensive" but would not be made for a couple of weeks, and might include senators.

It was a wary session, lacking the old warmth between Mr. Pearson and the press and it contrasted sharply with the Tory caucus across the Parliament Hill square the same day where Mr. Diefenbaker, having come through his own valley of bitterness, was full of quips about the Liberal treatment of the press.

Potash Operations Expanding

Saskatchewan's growing potash mining operations may have an annual capacity in 1970 of between 10 and 12 million tons, worth over $250 million at present prices, according to the Bank of Montreal's Business Review for October, just issued.

The B of M points out that the estimated capacity for 1970 would be equal to about half of the world production of potash last year and would be capable of supplying about one third of world demand in 1970.

About 95 per cent of "this rich new resource . . . is used as a plant nutrient. Prairie potash will thus be playing a large part in providing the increased supply of food that is so urgently needed in a world with a rapidly increasing population," the B of M states.

The bank points out that, although vast reserves of high grade potash were discovered over a wide area of Saskatchewan in the early 1940's, mining difficulties delayed the start of the first commercial operations. The first continuous potash mining operation to go into production was at Esterhazy in 1962. It is now the largest in the world, with a capacity of 2 million tons of finished product a year.

INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY

Noting the increasing use of potash and other chemical fertilizers, the bank observes that productivity in Canadian agriculture has increased rapidly in the postwar period. This year, new output records will be established for a wide range of crops and the wheat crop is expected to be over 700 million bushels, the second largest ever harvested.

This wheat crop "will enable Canada to supply traditional markets and honour some large-scale extraordinary commitments as well, with a considerable margin to spare," the bank continues. The carryover at the end of this crop year could be well over 400 million bushels.

Distribution of wheat and flour —Canada's most important agricultural export — is worth more than $1,100 million in 1964—has substantially changed in recent years. Changes in traditional markets have varied little, but new and very substantial demands from other areas have altered the export picture.

Other Canadian agricultural commodities have also had an important effect on exports. Sheets and other animal products exported last year were worth about $150 million; oilseeds and products, about $100 million; products, $61 million; tobacco, over $35 million; and fresh fruits $22 million.

The Homemaker

By Miss Irene Bly, Your District Home Economist

Youth in a Series on Money Management

"Spend and be free, but make no waste"

Message Your Expenses

Furnishing a home usually involves both beginning and continuing expenses which must be worked into your general family spending plan. After initial costs are paid, there will be additional expenses to maintain your furnishings . . . to replace items that are no longer useful . . . to add new furnishings as they are needed . . . to redecorate as it becomes desirable and practical. You will get the most from your home furnishings dollars if you work out a long range spending plan to cover both the present and future expenses. Decide how much you can reasonably afford to spend on home furnishings, decorating, and upkeep — and develop your plan accordingly.

It is advisable to obtain books from libraries and study furniture design, woods, upholstery fabrics and construction of the furniture. Then go to many furniture stores and price the various styles of furniture that you are interested in, remembering that prices of upholstered pieces vary with the grade of fabric you choose. Fabrics are graded by letter, D, E, F, etc., and the price increases as the letter's go higher, e.g., M. N. O, are the more expensive grades. Depending on how they are made, these should give you many years of wear: I shall deal more with this in several weeks' time.

Once you have done some studying and pricing you have a basis to begin planning.

Your Purchasing Plan

The cost of furnishing your home will depend partly on how much furniture and decorating is needed. If you are furnishing a first home and need "everything", your investment may be sizable in this situation, many families work out a long range home furnishings purchasing plan. They begin with a few major purchases and fill in with inexpensive substitutes until they can conveniently buy additional purchases into their budget. This method of furnishing a first home cuts down your initial investment. It allows you to begin with a few basic items you can enjoy through the years . . . lets you base your decisions on your needs after living in your home . . . offers you the opportunity to eventually have the type of home you really want. A long range plan is also effective if you are redecorating your home or want a systematic way of handling home furnishing and decorating costs. A two, three or five year home furnishings plan can help you fit these costs into your general family spending program.

The following ideas can help you develop a long range plan for furnishing and decorating a first home, remodelling your present one, or handling the costs involved in maintaining an attractive home.

To set up individual room plans:

— Begin with "a room description" for each room to be furnished or decorated. List the size of the room . . . exposure . . . colour of walls

Weekly Devotion!

"Whom say ye that I am?" Simon Peter answered and said, "Thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus replied, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, that thou are Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven."

The saying, "I can be a Christian without belonging to the Christian Church," is a vicious heresy of our day. This is an excuse for laziness and it certainly is not honest.

There would be no Christian faith without our Christian Church. The Church gave us all we know of Christ The Church gave us the Holy Scriptures. Anyone who practices Christian morality and does not go to church does so because his home has been Christian or his community has been Christian.

To be a Christian means surely to follow Christ.

The scriptures describe the Church as "the Body of Christ." Can one be a Christian and not be a member of that body?

The scriptures say that "Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for her." Can one love Christ and not love the Church for which Christ died?

The obligation for belonging to the Church is not that there are so many wise and good people in the Church, but that Christ Himself is in the Church.

True, there are members in the Church who appear unChristian. But one does not desert Christ because of sinners. Moreover in the Christian Church also one finds the loveliest and most gracious characters on earth.

To say, "I am better than the church goers" is to boast of smugness and Phariseism. Christ never asks us to measure ourselves by someone else. We are to measure ourselves by ourselves at our best. The standard of measurement is Christ Himself. "Be ye therefore perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect."

The training of the Twelve proves the intention of Christ to found a body loyal to Him.

The sacraments prove that He intended His ministry to be perpetuated. "This do in remembrance of me."

His commands prove that He intended to leave a body of men to do His will. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."

Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The Church is not a human institution. It is created by God.

There is no such thing as a solitary Christian in the New Testament. The Holy Spirit came upon the disciples not individually but when they were gathered together "with one accord in one place."

We must agree with the critics that we are not doing a perfect job, but as Moody said, "I like my way of doing it better than your way of not doing it."

Membership in the Church proclaims one's loyalty to Christ as well as one's fight against the dark, cruel materialistic forces.

The worst unemployment problem is the spiritually unemployed.

But you go to Church not to do something for others but to have something done for you. The imperative fact is not that the Church needs you, but that you need the Church.

No, the church is not perfect. No institution in this world is perfect. But certainly there is no better thing a man can do for himself, his family, his community, his country and his world than join the Christian Church. — Rev. James Perrie, Killam Presbyterian Church.

Show-Off Drivers Immature And Very Often Inferior

The motorist who drives with little regard for his own or others' safety could be suffering from an inferiority complex, according to the Canadian Highway Safety Council. A member of the Council's executive committee commented, "The motorist with an inherent feeling that he is inferior or that others consider him inferior, becomes bold and reckless when he gets behind the wheel of a motor vehicle. The feel of the weight and power of the vehicle gives him a false sense of his own weight and power and he decides, in his unwisdom, that he's going to show everybody that he is not as inferior as they think. Thus he becomes a real menace to other motorists and to pedestrians."

Such a driver could be immature, he added. "He really hasn't assumed adulthood. It's as though a child were in control of the car, with all the child's inexperienced sense of ability and authority." He advises drivers to avoid this type of motorist as soon as his eccentric, perhaps vicious begin to show up in traffic.

Practice defensive driving, he said, and suggested Safe-Driving Week, December 1 to 7, as a good time to start.

CUT GRAIN TRUCKING LOSSES!!

Plans for the construction of a Wind Baffle Board that will fit the front of a truck are available at the D. A. office in Sedgewick. These simply constructed Baffle Boards will save many bushels of grain from blowing off your truck while travelling down the highways.

Tests have shown that a truck travelling 40 miles per hour on a calm day will lose five bushels of grain, or eleven bushels at 60 miles per hour. The Wind Baffle Board will allow a truck to travel 60 miles per hour on a calm day before any grain will start to blow off. Stop in or write for your copy of the Wind Baffles, now.

— List "unusable furnishings now owned" for the room including furniture . . carpeting or rugs . . draperies or curtains . . lamps or lighting fixtures . . accessories.

— List "furnishings needed". Describe all furnishings in terms of colour and pattern, material (type of fabric, wood, floor covering) and style (modern, traditional, early American).

— Fill in "decorating needed" including upholstering furniture . . painting or papering . . cleaning draperies or carpets . . installing lighting fixtures. Include both materials (paint, paper, fabric) and services (painters, paper hangers, upholstery tailors).

When you have planned each room you are ready to develop a master purchasing plan for furnishing and decorating your home. You may wish to schedule purchases over a two, three, four or five year period — depending on your estimate of total expenses and the amount of money you have to spend. Consider all expenditures and decide when each best fits into your master plan. You will want to buy items most needed first. You may wish to purchase certain items together such as table lamps and end tables . . dining room table and chairs . . mattress and bedsprings. To set up your master purchasing plan:

— List all "first year purchases" and "estimated costs". Include both furnishing and decorating cost. When furnishing a first home, purchases usually takes a few years. furnishings and inexpensive fill-ins to meet immediate needs until you can afford items you really want.

— list "substitutes" in "first year purchases" and indicate "possible later use" for each. Try to find substitutes that can be used later such as canvas chairs which can be used on a porch in the future . . a cotton area rug to be transferred to the bedroom when carpeting is purchased . . wrought iron or wicker tables to go into a recreation room or on the porch.

— List "total first year costs" and list them into your overall money management plan.

— List "future purchases" and "estimated costs" in the space provided and plan ahead to fit them into your budget.

Professional Services

Among the "professionals" who can help you decorate and furnish your home are decorators, painters, paper hangers, drapery and upholstery tailors, lighting specialists. The cost of their services depends on how much help you require and where you seek it. Before calling experts consider:

— What services you need — decorating, painting, paper hanging, laying carpets or tile, lighting, repairing walls or woodwork.

— What services you can perform and the time, energy and costs involved.

— What professional help you require, where to find it and how much you will pay. Experts are usually available independently or through a retail store's service department or a service organization. The type and amount of assistance you will get varies. Be sure to check exactly what you will receive for the price you pay and compare costs from several sources.

— How the costs of professional services can be worked into your spending plan along with other costs of furnishing your home.

A decorator may be able to help you make wise decisions and avoid costly mistakes. Decorator services range from simple advice to the actual purchase and placement of your furnishings. You can use these services to work out a master plan for furnishing and/or decorating your home over a period of time or all at once . . to decorate a single room or your entire home . . to plan a new home or remodel your present home . . to help you select and co-ordinate all of your furnishings or only a few basic pieces. Services are available through independent decorators . . furniture or department store decorating services. . women's magazines.

Because an "average" accident last year cost $810...a jump of $113 in just 5 years

Automobile insurance rates in most areas of Canada will increase in 1966. Prudent drivers ask why premiums should rise again. Here are the key reasons:

- Every year the number of vehicles on Canadian roads is increasing . . . but the total cost of accidents in the past five years has gone up three times as fast as the number of cars which together must provide the money to pay for these accidents.
- And during the past five years the number of accidents has spiralled much faster than the number of cars that are on the road.
- In that same period the total cost of insurance claims has doubled.
- Since 1960 this claims cost has been climbing at an average of $40 million a year. This year's insurance bill for accidents will total $400 million.
- Each accident costs more than it did five years ago —the result of more expensive and luxurious cars, increasing repair costs, higher medical expenses and compensation for time off work or lost income.

The only way to stop this spiral is to have fewer accidents. That is the best way, too, to cut the tragic toll of 4,500 deaths and 150,000 injuries in Canada each year. Safety pays . . . it saves lives and dollars.

9 Even Good Drivers Have Accidents

Drivers with a three-year accident-free record earn a 35 per cent discount off basic insurance rates. But even good drivers have accidents. Eighty per cent of all accidents are caused by people who have driven three or more years without an accident. That is why the basic rates go up for everyone—even the good driver who still gets his discount.

HOMEMAKERS' CLUB HOLDS BANQUET

LOUGHEED—The November 17 meeting of the Loughead Homemakers came to order with the singing of O Canada followed by the pledge led by Betty Velbert. The roll call was answered by giving various methods and uses of applying bias tape. The upcoming banquet was discussed.

Short talks were given by Margaret Burden on Sewing Machines and Lena Sterbakken on 4-H. From this we learned that in Canada there are some 72,780 members enrolled in 5,500 clubs and that 4-H is carried on in 72 countries of the world. After the meeting was adjourned we had a guest speaker, Miss Kvisl home economics teacher from Sedgewick Central, who spoke on how to adapt to other countries' customs. Lunch was then served.

On November 20, we held our banquet. 61 people were in attendance. Following the banquet Mrs. Kashai, our guest speaker, gave a talk on her home country of British Guiana and then we asked her questions about things we wanted to know. Larue Sterbakken was presented with a gift from the Red and White Store as effectency winner from last year.

This man is fighting fire.

Although rarely seen in helmet, coat and rubber boots, as a member of the Alberta Fire Commissioner's staff, this man is a fire fighter who plays an important role in helping to reduce fire losses.

It is the function of the Fire Commissioner's office to prevent fires. Prevention is carried out in a number of ways—through right enforcement of all fire laws and regulations, including investigations into the causes of fires and, where warranted, prosecution of arsonists. To assist in the reduction of fire losses, the Fire Commissioner and his staff conduct an extensive Fire Training program, including Fire Officers' training courses at the Alberta Fire Training School, which is open to all Alberta fire departments. This office also conducts a comprehensive Fire Prevention program for schools, institutions and industries, and promotes the Fire Prevention Week—the highly effective annual campaign designed to make the public more aware of the ever present threat of fire.

Alberta's fire losses in lives and property, while still too high, would be much higher without the trained firemen and the teams and men behind-the-scenes work of the Alberta Fire Commissioner's Office.

On A South Seas Holiday Tour

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Dear Art:

Well, we're on our way. Had an uneventful trip to Vancouver. It was snowing in Edmonton on the 4th of November when we left, but had cleared by Wetaskiwin. We arrived in Banff that evening with the moonlight shining on the mountains, which is the best way to see them. It snowed that night and the roads were very icy to Lake Louise They improved after that and were nice through Rogers Pass We stopped that night in Kamloops and visited with the Strapp family Had a very enjoyable visit, and they wish to be remembered to their friends in Sedgewick.

It was raining the next evening when we arrived in Vancouver (when isn't it). We visited Mrs. Brandigan who along with her sister Ruth, saw us off on the boat on Nov 5th. The send-off was grand, but when the boat played Auld Lang Syne it threw in a sad note. The boat trip was quite rough to San Francisco and gale warnings were posted for small craft. It rained all the way and kept up while in port. We took in a couple of tours and a ride on a cable car and were soaked to the skin when we got back to the boat Left Frisco the next day and arrived in Los Angeles the following morning. We visited Man O'Calloghan. Unfortunately she offered to drive us back to the boat and we got lost. We found a policeman and he told us the Canberra was docked just three blocks away We now know there were two Canberras and both docked there at the same time. We had only 15 minutes to find the right one and we didn't set sail for another hour. We have had smooth sailing since and the sun is now shining, our slicers have settled down. Ahead lies Hawaii. We hear they are having floods and home are being evacuated because of slides. We wonder what will happen there. Will write again soon.—George and Beverly Davison.

What "My Bank" did with your dollars in 1965

Clyde Clark, Manager
Sedgewick Branch
Bank of Montreal

They were active dollars, those savings dollars you placed in the keeping of the Bank of Montreal in 1965. As manager of the local branch of "My Bank", I would like to take a few moments to tell you in briefly on the use that the Bank made of them.

Every dollar you saved during the past year was put right to work helping people directly or indirectly. Many of those dollars were used to aid people in financing things that meant an improved way of life for them . . . such things as cars, home improvements, household appliances of all kinds. Another substantial number was lent to small, medium and large business enterprises, encouraging them to expand and employ more people.

The personal savings of people like yourself amounted to very nearly one-half of the total deposits of $4,085,387,144 at the Bank's year-end on October 31st. This figure represents a record high for deposits in our 146 years of operations and in turn permitted us to record a new all-time high in total loans of $3,167, 990, 306.

Another $811,787,051 was invested in high-grade government bonds which have a ready market, plus $163,541,999 in other securities—mainly short-term credits to industry.

What else did your hard working dollars do in 1965? Well, they breathed new vitality into virtually every community across our nation. They financed new industry and created new jobs . . . helped farmers improve both their farms and their way of living . . . constructed new schools and helped students get a better education . . . aided fishermen to increase their catches and their incomes . . . built new roads and highways . . . supported community projects, large and small, of many kinds.

Yes, your savings dollars worked hard in 1965 — and hardest of all for you. For, steadily accumulating at interest, they are a sound investment in a better future for yourself and your family.

On behalf of the Bank of Montreal, may I say "thank you" for your confidence in "My Bank" and for the opportunity you are giving us to work with you in building a more prosperous Canada.

DO YOU KNOW!

THAT—more wheat was produced during the five year depression period 1931-1935, than during the prosperous five year period 1926-1930.

THAT—After establishment of the Social Credit League, more than 5,000 study groups were spontaneously organized in all parts of the province.

THAT—In 1935 Social Credit became a political party and in the election of that same year, fifteen elected 56 Social Credit members in the 63 seat legislature.

THAT—Mr. Aberhart had not been a candidate in the 1935 election but after the success of the Social Credit candidates there was an overwhelming demand for him to become leader in the legislature so he accepted a vacated seat in the Okotoks constituency and became Premier of the first Social Credit government in the world.

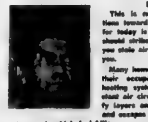
LET'S GET FRESH



By Bert Odland

This is an advancing smooth action toward the fair sex. Our crusade for today is for fresh indoor air. This should strike a responsive chord in all you stale air sufferers . . . all fifteen of you.

Many homes today inflict stale air on their occupants simply because the heating system does not provide controlled air circulation. Air bathes in stuffy layers and pockets. Warm air rises and escapes out the roof at a too-rapid rate, causing high fuel bills.

The bright spot in the picture is that a good many of these homes can be "cured" easily without additional equipment. If they have a good forced air heating system, all that is needed is an adjustment for CONTINUOUS AIR CIRCULATION.

I don't mean a big, constant blast of air through your house. I mean gentle, almost imperceptible, circulation of air. It can make a whale of a difference in your comfort. A breath of spring in the dead of winter.

You don't exactly get this with just a twist of the wrist . . . but almost. Qualified heating experts can do the job in a jiffy.

That's us . . . qualified through experience and Lennox factory training.

Call us, we will answer with glee.

Adolph Schafflers Married 25 Years

KILLAM—Twenty-five years ago, it was a blustery, cold Armistice-31 degrees below in fact—pretty cold for a wedding; this year, it threatened to be a somewhat similar day weatherwise. Nevertheless, about fifty relatives from Edmonton, Provost, Calgary, Fort St. John, Sherwood Park, Gleichen and Slave Lake were able to attend the Silver Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Schaffler. The R. C. Parish Hall was adorned with yellow, silver and white streamers while a three-tier Anniversary cake bedecked Head Table. Guests of honour at the relation's banquet were the "Silver Anniversary" couple, Father McCarthy, Mrs. Minnie Gramlich, (the bride's mother), Bl. Gramlich (best man) and his wife, Ina, and Lillian Reinhardt (sister of the groom).

The Anniversary "Bride" wore a white and silver brocade dress with a white fur collar and silver shoes. A dark brown suit was the groom's attire. The ladies at Head Table were fresh yellow rose corsages while the men wore white carnations.

During dinner, M.C. — Dr. Granlich called on Cheryl Schaffler to sing "On This Day" and "When I Fall In Love." Cheryl "played" and Kathy Schaffler is play "Alley Cat". A speech from the groom was followed by the presentation of gifts from Killam residents. Brothers, sisters, immediate family, and cousins, had bought the celebrated couple an R.C.A. Victor stereo in remembrance of the occasion.

Baptist Church

The Womens' Missionary Society held its monthly meeting on Thursday night with seventeen ladies present. A very challenging message on "Faith" was presented by Mrs. Grymalouki, with Mrs. Danielson giving a reading on "Missions". A duet by Mrs. Grymalouki and Mrs. Fredrick was enjoyed. Much business was discussed which included:

(1) program and lunch committees for the Thank Offering Program next Thursday night, December 2; (2) supper plans for the Three Hills Choir on Sunday evening December 5; (3) arrangements for spar hones on December 10, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Rust who are celebrating their 25th wedding anniversary; (4) Mrs. Cyr was nominated as the W.M.S rep. resentative on the library committee; (5) the motion was made that we purchase the book "Here to Live the Victorious Life"; (6) roll call for next month will be $1.80 for Irene and Viola Engstrom who are missionaries in Mexico.

Lunch was served by the hostess, Mrs. Ralph Sorenson, and her assistant, Mrs. Danielson.

The Young People sponsored a "Musical Night" at the church on Saturday night. Young people from Laughead, Forestburg and Killam as well as a ladies trio from the Fundamental Baptist Church in Edmonton participated in the special music for the evening. Lunch was served during intermission. Many commented on how much it was appreciated and felt that this type of fraggatration should be held more frequently.

Slag. O heavens, and be joyful, O earth. Isaiah 49:13.

The executive of the C.Y.P. of Alberta were in charge of the Sunday morning service. The representative of the British and foreign Bible Society presented a brief outline of the importance of this work and stated the budget for this year, during the morning worship service.

From 7 to 9 o'clock, guests from Killam, Sedgewick, Strome, Provost and Beda — estimated 150 people — arrived in couples and in groups to attend the "Open House" in Schaffler's honour. At nine o'clock, Mr. Sig Fox presented the couple with a card signed by friends.

1966 — FIFTY-SEVENTH YEAR — 1965 SEDGEWICK, ALBERTA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 9TH, 1965 Volume 56 — Number 30

A LOT OF WATER—Last Saturday workmen there making the final finishing touches, on the water tower before it was erected by the two large cranes.

The tower will hold 150,000 gallons of water and that will make a lot of cups of coffee.

New Water System Ready By Year End

FIVE LEGS—All the better to stand on. Well not quite. A calf on the farm of Mr. J. J. Lank, south west of Bruce was born with an extra leg on the top of its back. The calf is perfectly healthy otherwise and is now seven six weeks old and the leg which normally lies flat on the calf's side is hardly noticeable.

DAVELAND—By the end of the year the residents of the Town of Daveland should be using water from their new Municipal Water System.

Work on the $140,000 project has been proceeding for several months and is now nearing completion. All the water mains are now installed and lines are available to some 210 users although many of these are not yet fully connected to the system.

The last big step in the project got under way last Saturday when the water tower arrived from Calgary.

Water pressure of some 40 psi will result from this tower which is 100 feet high and holds 150,000 gallons.

Transportation of the tank from Calgary was done by truck under a $2,000 contract, but at the last minute it almost arrived by train. As the tank was crossing the railroad at Dayaland it high centered on the rails and it was discovered that a train was approaching. It was pulled back off the tracks and after the train had passed a crane was used to lift one end so it would clear the crossing

Mayor Pryor tells the press that the new water system will be paid for by the issuance of debentures which will be repaid over a twenty year period. The Mayor also said that other than erection of the tower only a few small items remain to be completed and the council hopes to have the water flowing by New Years Eve.

A question period followed Mr. Bruce's talk was very

A discussion was held on publicity and it was decided to have a personal contact for the next meeting which won't be held until the last Thurs. in Febuary. Each member is to phone or get in contact with five people just before the meeting and ask them to come and also to get them to contact five others. DECEMBER WEATHER SHAMES NOVEMBER

After what most people considered a pretty rough November, the weather man apparently decided a break was in order, for so far in December the weather has moderated and balmy days have made life a lot more comfortable for both man and beast.

Stockmen are pleased with the change which allows stock to forage for themselves and helps to conserve the feed supplies.

As is always the case, mild weather after snow and freezing, has created hazardous road and street conditions, and motorists are advised to drive with due caution

Overloading Our Capacities!

We're not just certain that the above caption is apropos to the subject matter of this article, but in this day of changing words and new phrases we are not too worried about it, for you can scan many headlines today and find nothing in the accompanying article to relate to it. Besides that we have a deadline to meet.

Did you ever watch an operator of front-end loader shoving dirt with a machine that has a one yard capacity, because of nagging from the foreman, trying to move loads of 1 1-2 yards? Then you also noticed that the extra part of the load spilled over and dropped off, going back to where it was originally intended to be. Everything and everybody has a capacity beyond which it may be dangerous to venture. That's the way we see the present boom in higher education, and it would appear that the present merry goings-on in colleges and universities backs us up to a great degree. Some 50 to 200 thousand students now enrolled in colleges and universities across Canada will fail or drop out before completing courses. As unsettling as this fact is, some of the reasons given for it are more disturbing. Pressure for high marks to the extent that cheating is being encouraged; difficulty in the translation from high school to college life; and by no means least, the confusion over proper sex behaviour. The first can be blamed partly at least on those with the courage unsuitable material to pursue higher education. The second reason advanced lies entirely with the student, for if he cannot change to conditions, he has no business being there. The third is a social problem which society seems unable to cope with. But in the final analysis all are problems, if they are problems, that must be met on an individual basis. A person who can't control himself, physically or emotionally confronts an enemy only he can dispose of. The same thing applies to those of the opposite sex. Those who choose to go to college dreaming of a glorious three or four years of parties, games and intellectual freedom, and lacking the capacity to cope with scholarship responsibilities and requirements, will find such a life most unhappy. It is probably time we stopped encouraging unsuitable students to seek higher education. You can't overload the capacity.

Unprogressive Progression!

"Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever" said the little babbling brook these many years back. Not a truism by any means for with the passing of the eons many a babbling brook has ceased to exist, either through its own inability to meet the changing topography, or man's insatiable desire to correct nature for her obvious mistakes. Many years ago man struggled to build across Canada a gleaming line of steel to transport men and materials to the far reaches of growing nation. In the minds of some it was inconceivable that like the brook, these lines of steel would not go on forever. Today it is conceivable that the time of the railroad is at an end. Sound fantastic?

There was a time when man could board a train in any wayside community and travel to where he desired. Today the passenger service on trains is extinct in this area. There was a time when express came in daily by train, now it's all handled by trucks. Millions of board feet of lumber are being transported by truck inter-provincially, as well as thousands of dollars worth of other goods. Transports are assuming boxcar proportions. While all this is going on technology is coming up with ideas of transporting liquids and solids through pipelines. Assuming that such lines could handle grain and fuels, etc., with transports taking care of the heavier equipment, what will there be left for the railroads?

Railway companies must see the handwriting on the tracks, and are now taking definite and fur-reaching steps to consolidate their position. High-priced hired help is being laid off in the closing of scores of local stations in wholesale numbers, services are being curtailed and public accomodation is going by the board. All this due to changing conditions and man's desire to get more done sooner. Railways have not kept pace with changing conditions and thus are destined to become obsolete. It will come as no surprise to us to learn that railway stations in the area are closing. Change is the way. Men may come and men may go, but railways will not go on forever.

MORE OF THE SAME IN COLOR?

Alberta Government Telephones is one of eight member companies presently working with the Trans-Canada Telephone System to make the necessary technical changes on their microwave network to accomodate color television. It is predicted that Canada will have color by 1967. We first viewed colored T.V. some three years ago in the U.S., and while we were pleased with the emphasis it places on scenic views in the wonders of nature, bringing out as it does the natural, we were not very impressed with it otherwise. Far more important to us who are trying desperately to maintain our sanity in a world gone mad with sadism and moral corruption, would be the cleaning up of television shows all along the line. Adding color to the sexperfect makes him no more desirable as a healthy citizen; adding color to a building on fire doesn't improve the stature of an arsonist, nor does it improve the intelligence of those long-haired and bearded upholders of civil rights who lie down in non-green streets. Yet, colored television is comming, because man is capable of great technological advancement, slow as he may be in other realms of human behaviour.

CHALLENGE TO REAL STATESMANSHIP

The put-together of the new Parliament suggests that most Canadians are not convinced and have not been convinced for some years that a strong and firmly directed central government is in their best interest.

Indeed, since the things that must now be done are major, complete of uncertain outcome, and in many cases unpopular, it is possible that the public senses its best position to be one of uncertainty.

The outcome of the election makes it abundantly clear, that it is now up to the reigning politicians to accommodate themselves to the kind of Parliament that the public, in its whim or wisdom, has provided. It is, after all, not up to the public to provide the kind of House that would best suit those who sit, or would like to sit, in seats of might.

The fact is more Canadians voted for the Liberals than for any other party. They return with the right and the duty to lead the House. They have been given another chance at governing with a minority. They have the men to do the job. They must now get on with it, and show if they are more comfortable, preferably in 1970.—St. Paul Journal

NO TAXFREE ROAD TO LEARNING

Dislike it bitter foes by university students, or their inability to pay them, is probably going to lead to greater subsidization. Regardless of the constitution, the people in higher education, including the undergraduates, want the money and they do not care where it comes from. Some of them are grade six in social science.

Euclid told King Ptolemy that there was no royal road to geometry. This was in answer to a royal question as to whether there was not a short cut to help a fellow learn all these propositions. Somebody in the 19th century took the statement to heart, geometry and enlarged it to "learning". There were hopes on in a reader for the junior grades when some people had memories attended elementary school. One teacher thought it was a good idea for recitations and used it to try to get the pupils to stop a sniggering recital. That word "royal" insisted to be pronounced in two long drawn out syllables.

This poem about the lack of the royal road to learning seems to have disappeared, in some probably couldn't find a rhyme for "geometry" although Ogden Nash might. The enlargement to "learning" was for the poet not much of a strain, and hardly a deviation from Mr. Euclid's stuffy and nervewor conception.

The point to be made here is no taxfree road to learning. People who go to college learn more stuff therefore seem after their college careers are said to be earning more. As they earn more they will be taxed more. So it may be that college tuition fees will be paid by the taxpayer, with the appropriate and inevitable ratkraft for the house of bureaucracy.

Another quotation from Euclid, in dismissing a pupil who wanted to know the cash reward for knowledge of geometry: "Give him threepence since he must make gain out of what he learns".—Printed Word.

Storm Warnings

OTTAWA — Storm warnings that Canada may be rocked by a major medicare controversy even more violent than the turbulence that developed over the medical services scheme in Sask. in 1962, were sounded recently. The warnings were heard during the working conference on the introduction of a health charter for Canadians.

Sponsored by 21 national organizations to educate church, labour, private welfare, farm, student and women's organizations, about health issues and proposals for medical care insurance, the conference attracted nearly 250 delegates. The conference is timely in light of the Hall Royal Commission's recent recommended a national health service plan for Canada. Prime Minister L. B. Pearson has set Jan. 1, 1967 as the target for imple menting medicare across Canada.

The Canadian Government at Fed.-Prov. conference earlier this year, subject to parliamentary approval, has said it will support provincial medicare plans by means of a fiscal contribution of pre-determined size. This proposal does not require detailed agreements governing the medicare plan. It only calls for a general Fed.-Prov. understanding as to the nature of the health programs which will make it a Fed.-Prov. contribution appropriate.

The Federal Government has laid down four criteria on which such an understanding should be based. They are:

(1) The scope of the benefits should be all the services provided by physicians, both general practitioners and specialists.

(2) The plan should be universal. It should cover all residents of the province on uniform terms and conditions.

(3) The plan must be publicly administered, either directly by the provincial government or by a provincial government agency.

(4)Each provincial plan should provide full transferability of benefits when people are absent from the province or when they move their homes to another province.

The Report of the Royal Commission headed by Hon. Emmett M. Hall, Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, has already generated considerable discussion. It was with a view of providing a forum for public debate and contributing to a greater public knowledge of medicare that the conference on health services was convened.

The great medicare debate was thereby transferred to the main ballroom of Ottawa's plush Chateau Laurier hotel. There an officer of the Canadian Medical Assn. and a Commissioner of the Canadian Hospital Assn. presented their opposite views. They did not engage in any fancy verbal fireworks, nor any heated debate. Both doctors were self-spoken men who set out their arguments, had less and more the storm warnings came thru' to the delegates.

Mr. Justice Hall opened the conference with an address in which he contended that the economy can afford health and education costs at the same time. He said there cannot and should not be any question of a clash or of priority between the needs of better education and those of good health. He argued that the Canadian economy is strong enough to carry concurrently these two essential services.

He was followed the next day by Dr. John E. P. Hastings, at the University of Toronto. Prof. Hastings said that the issue of "medicare" has "in effect been settled" as a result of the Federal Provincial meetings earlier this year.

But it was far from "settled" in the views of Dr. Victor Goldbloom of Montreal, who represented the Canadian Medical Association and Dr. Samuel Wolfe, Medical Director of the Saskatoon community clinic where government medicare is now functioning.

Dr. Goldbloom insisted that doctors must have the right to opt out of any national or provincial medicare program. He pointed out that the Sask. plan gave them that right, but the doctors had to fight for it.

"As long as that door is left open, as long as doctors are free to walk out, they'll walk in. If you bar the door, they'll break it down and walk out," he told the conference.

Dr. Wolfe said, "in the major lesson of Saskatchewan. If it is not learned we will be in danger of going through the same thing again and that would be very unfortunate for Canada."

Dr. Wolfe let fire with this verbal blast: "There has been a lot of nonsense spoken in recent years about government sponsored medical care plans and their supposed evils."

He defended the schemes now operating in Saskatchewan. He said, "There is no reason why we in Canada cannot have the best of all medical worlds in a national plan run by the provinces, an intelligent and informed public and satisfied, self-governing health profession."

Dr. Wolfe added however, "How having said all this, I am not a Pollyanna." He said "Wait Wee Too Loud, Driver Fined."

The Honourable Rene Tremblay, Postmaster General, designated January 19 1966 as being the release date for two new stamps featuring the floral emblems and armorial bearings of the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. These large size 5c stamps will be the ninth and tenth in the floral emblem series which began in May, 1964.

The prairie lily was chosen as Saskatchewan's floral emblem in 1941. The stamp is printed in brown, green and orange. Alberta adopted the wild rose as its official emblem in 1930. Traces of red and green were used to print this stamp.

The stamps were designed and printed by Canadian Bank Note Company of Ottawa from data provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The offset method was used to print the floral emblems. The provincial coat of arms and the backgrounds were printed by the intaglio process.

There will be 15 million Alberta Stamps issued and 11 million Saskatchewan stamps issued.

A Day Spent In Hawaii

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Somewhere at Sea—Dear At: The crossing from Los Angeles to Hawaii was quite routine, so will let you about the boat. We are on the S.S. Canberra which is the 'Flag' ship of the P and O Orient Lines and named after the capital of Australia. She made her maiden voyage in 1961 and weighs 45,786 tons. This is more impressive than it sounds as it carries more passengers than any boat silent, accomplished by the use of aluminum superstructure and new concepts in design. She carries 2,238 passengers and a crew of 888.

Cigarettes are quite cheap at 30c for a package of 25, and you can get stoned out of your mind at half the price of on shore, and you don't have to worry about driving home either in spite of it all there seems to be very few drunks on board. Maybe the thought of falling overboard takes the desire out of them. Meals are good but slightly tiresome. They all taste the same. I'm starting to look forward to the Sioux's cooking.

We spent a day in Hawaii. We and another couple rented a Jeep and headed for a whirlwind tour of the island. The pineapple and sugar plantations are tremendous and in all stages of growth. We saw them both planting and harvesting. Everything is highly mechanized and it is a wonder they produce it as cheaply as they do. The soil is very peculiar, having the color of an old rusty plow and consisting of iron filings. But the plants seem thrive. It is a beautiful place and we hope to visit it again.

The next three days we used to rest and (no surprise to our friends back home) slept in until noon. Today has been very hectic and dramatic. At 7:30 a.m. we crossed the Equator. At 9:00 a.m. the host came to a complete halt while a canoe from Samoa dropped emergency supplies of oxygen to us. There was a child very sick with pneumonia on board. An hour later the same thing was repeated, and in all six bottles were dropped about 100 yards from the boat from a plane only 20 feet above the water.

At six this evening we were met by a U.S. Coastguard boat from Simoa which took the child and its mother to Samoa to meet a plane which was to fly them to Fiji. There was quite a stir on board with even the crew watching proceedings. It rarely happens.

The temperature all day has been about 84 with the R.H. at 80. This has made it rather sticky and blisters has blossomed out everywhere. So have sunburns.

We lose Wednesday entirely as we cross the date line. It will be added to go to bed Thursday morning after having been up all day Tuesday. Oh well, we get to Auckland that me-h sooner. Arrival is set for Friday morning, and we will be in New Zealand until January 16th. Anyone wishing to write to us there should address as follows: Mrs. Dorothy C/O Trust Bank Corp. Son, 9 Commerce St., Auckland, N. Z. We wish you all Merry Christmas and a Prosperous New Year.

—George and Beverly.

"As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Psalm 42:1. The panting deer has escaped the hunter and is thirsting after a drink from the water brook. King David is hunted by Saul; his refreshing must come from God. He said, "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." Psalm 42:2. Man is a dual creature, Physical and Spiritual, thus both parts of man seek security and refreshing from some source. Bigger schools and better education is being accomplished to secure against ignorance, poverty, unemployment etc. Medical science and research is securing against disease, of mind and body. The United Nations Security Council watches over our wonderful country. These benefits are all good but Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God". Matt. 4:4. The soul of man can only feel secure as he is conscious and accepts God. One day Jesus said to disciples that it is necessary that he should die, and after that he would go away for awhile. The small group of followers looked sad and lonely. But Jesus said "I go to prepare a place for you" John 14:2. He also said "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself". John 14:3.

He also assured them of another comforter; the Holy Spirit, and in John 14:6 he made it clear how to get there. Note his words "I am the way, the truth and the life; "He is the right way, the secure way, and the only way.

Do we want facts, he is the truth. His promises are sure. Paul said, "And being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform. Romans 4:21. His life is eternal He said "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly".

There is security in His Way, His Truth and His Life.

Nazarene Minister.

COUNTRY LIFE ANSWER FOR PRAYED NERVES

To be—or not to be—(Like the Joneses next door)—that is the burning question.

It seems, as the years so quickly slip by, there is often dis-satisfaction among men and women around 35 to 40 years of age who dwell in our cities. I am not referring so much to city-born—and bred folks, as to the hundreds of men and women who have drifted into the cities from farms during—and possibly because of the depression of the 30s. Many of these same folks have made good in the cities; married and raising families and are now settled down to a world of their choice. Good luck to them.

How many of these same people can re-call those days of hardship during those memorial 30s? No sane —thinking person to-day would want to repeat those experiences—nor want their children to. But deep down in their hearts I believe many long for those HAPPY times that seems to be lacking today.

I also believe that if a poll were taken among those who were on farms then—to find just what their deep, honest desires are, we would find many who would, if it were possible—go back to a prairie farm.

I recently read an article along these lines—where the parents of three half-grown youngsters became fed up with city life—they both were brought up on a farm—so they finally sold their house and business in the city. They then bought a quarter section in the country—with no buildings—away from the hustle of city bat class to where the children could catch a school bus. They built a rough sort of shack and started to LIVE.

With no electricity—there was no T.V. nor radio to "Blat 'n blare" for hours at a time. Their cook stove was the wood-burning type. They used coal-oil lamps and there oh, so old-fashioned sad-irons for ironing. She did their washing on the board—and they had no outside plumbing. And could you believe it?—They were actually HAPPY. NOW they lived—not just existed. They worked and played together, and had time to enjoy the great out-doors—every one's rightful heritage.

Has this been possible in the city? NO. In the city—the end of each day found the parents exhausted from coping with the many problems which had confronted them. In the city, the children wanted to watch T.V. by the hour; Scarcely wanting to go out-side at all.

I realize it is necessary for hundreds of folks to-day to live in our towns and cities. They MUST—to balance things. Never-the-less, I still maintain that for pure, un-adulterated peace and quietness—for sure cure for frayed nerves—country living is the answer.

Possibly because I have tried both—and found country life best—is why I advise anyone who has become fed up with the rat-race of city life—to give the idea of country living an honest try and see if you do not agree with me.

LONG VIGIL KEEPS ALBERTA RAT FREE

The long vigil to keep Alberta a rat-free province continues.

J. B. Gurba, provincial Supervisor of Crop Protection and Pest Control, reports that a recent check of our defence line along the Saskatchewan barrier shows that it is holding remarkably well.

According to Mr. Gurba, stray Norway rats were found in many of Alberta's centres during the summer and fall. Only a few weeks ago, four were discovered close to shipping centres in scattered locations in the Edmonton area. Luckily, they were all dead when found. In addition, two live rats were found at Falher in used grain combines imported from Saskatchewan and another live rat turned up in Calgary in a carload of tires from Ontario

These incidents, says Mr. Gurba, all point to the fact that there is no room for complacency in our rat control program. He points out that the winter season is the opportune time to check for stray rats which may have slipped into Alberta. During the cold weather they move into buildings and other forms of warm shelter in cities, towns, villages and farms where they can be easily located and exterminated.

Mr. Gurba urges anyone who thinks he may have seen a rat, to report the fact immediately to his local pest control officer, municipal centre or district agriculturist There are more than 250 locally appointed pest control officers in Alberta to check such reports and, when necessary, to assist with control measures.

DO YOU KNOW!

THAT—soon after they were in power the Alberta Social Credit government adopted a pay-as-you-go policy.

THAT—the Alberta Bill of Rights, introduced in 1946 by Premier Manning, was designed to implement the will of the people and make available to them the control of their own credit, without infringing on the rights of banks or the Federal Government. It was declared unconstitutional by the Privy Council.

THAT—Alberta has not had an opportunity to organize a real Social Credit economy. Every attempt to legislate to this end has been frustrated, either by the Courts or the Federal Government and by the power of monopoly finance.

THAT—because Social Credit and a real democracy are inseparated as one, the struggle in Alberta has been against all forms of totalitarian tyranny, whether communist, fascist, national socialist, bureaucratic or any other. Albertans have fought every attempt to centralize power and have defended the personality of man, his dignity, his culture and his freedom.

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

BULLETIN:

HAYNES BOYS' INITIATIVE HONORED

When their father entered a Calgary hospital several months ago, David and Duane Linklater proved themselves sons to be proud of! They took over the duties of milking seven cows, and the care of other farm animals — and still kept up their marks in school.

Mrs. Linklater suffers from arthritis, and the boys baked twenty loaves of bread each week, made the family meals and helped her with other household duties. David is fifteen years old, and Duane is thirteen.

Their youngest sister Kathie cannot walk. The two boys carry her everywhere, showing patience and understanding.

The boys still find time for the East Lacombe 4-H Beef Club, and are active in many sports.

We congratulate David and Duane Linklater. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspaper Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility companies.

This is one of a series of Junior Citizen Award announcements. Our special thanks to Tom Ford, Editor of the Lacombe Globe and to David and Duane's nominator, Mrs. I. Linklater of Elnora.

Why Pay To Suffer!

By Bert Odland

It's costing you money . . . that dry, parched, stuffy feeling you get in your nose, eyes and throat during the indoor heating system.

Why are you actually paying for this discomfort? Well, it's because you are burning more fuel than you need to burn for comfort. You see, when the air is dry it draws moisture from living tissues (that's you). This process robs you cool, so therefore it takes extra heat to make you comfortable . . . up to 20% more fuel than if the air were not so dry. And you pay through the nose in more ways than one.

The answer is controlled humidity during the heating season. With proper humidity, you'll feel just as warm at 71 as you do at 78 or thereabouts with low humidity. Your throat, nose and eyes will feel much better, too. So will your pocketbook.

Don't forget the health aspect of proper humidity, too. Dried out membranes are a target for germs. Skin and hair are healthier, look better, when not parched. And how about furniture, musical instruments and book bindings? . . . all can be damaged severely by overly dry indoor air.

Lennox engineers and scientists offer us relief from the cost and discomfort of low indoor humidity during the heating season. That relief is in the form of effective, yet low cost humidifiers which add moisture to the heated air as it leaves your furnace. We will be happy to tell you, and show you, more. Just call us at . . .

Joyce Komperdo Wed At Killam

St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Killam was the scene of a lovely wedding on October 16th, when Joyce Olga, only daughter of Mrs. Joe Komperda, became the bride of Donald Allen, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilton Allen of Fawcett. Rev. Father McCarthy officiated at the ceremony.

The radiant bride entered the church on the arm of her grandfather. She was gowned in an A-line model of white nylon over organza, lavishly trimmed with appliqued seed pearls and with lily-point sleeves. Her chapel veil misted from a crown of seed pearls, and she carried a cascade bouquet of red carnations roses and lily of the valley.

The bridesmaids, Miss Doreen Komperdo and Miss Arlene Weeks, chose matching gowns of pastel de soie in a copen blue, while the flower girl, Miss Virginia Komperdo, wore a pink embroidered floor dress. Matching floral arrangements with gathered veiling formed the headdresses. Their colonial bouquets were of yellow roses and pink roses respectively.

The groom was attended by Donald Allen, and Brian Allen. Ushers were Ed Komperdo and Jim Allen.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the parish hall for 80 guests. Open house followed at the home of the bride's mother.

Flagstaff Request For Hard Surfaced Road Turned Down

New North Approach Road Being Built Into Hardisty

HARDISTY — Heavy equipment and earth moving machines are busy in the Townsite of Hardisty, building a new approach road for the convenience of rural residents in the West and North of Town.

Old timers will remember the main road approach to Hardisty which entered the Town from the North-West. This was then a part of the main "Highway" from Longhead which came in from the North, crossing the CPR tracks about two miles West of Hardisty. In recent years, and because of the hardtop highway 13, this road has been neglected, but a request from farmers has resulted in the old road being given a new lease on life, and at the same time making it more convenient for those in the North-West to get into town.

SEDGEWICK—Pursuant to notice sent out November 22nd, a special meeting of the M. D. Flagstaff Council was held in the board room on December 2nd, with all seven councillors and the Sec.-Treas. in attendance.

A letter from the Flagstaff Lodge advised council that at a meeting held November 12th, the Managing board had approved an increase in the rate to guests in the Lodge to $75.00 in single and $90.00 in double rooms. The board asked for approval. Council was also informed in the letter that the rates at the Flagstaff-Beaver Auxiliary Hospital in Killam had also been put into effect. Council gave approval to the increase in rates.

Application from the Provincial Planning Director to subdivide a one-acre parcel out of the S. E. 3-42-15 for a farm machinery storage site, was approved.

A request from radio station CFCW in be supplied with information from meetings, to be put out over the air was rejected, but the station was informed that representative from the station would be welcome to attend the council meetings.

Letter from the Minister of Highways informed council that his department was unable to honor their request for a hard-surfaced road from Alliance to Camrose running parallel to the CNR tracks. He suggested that there were many other roads in Alberta with more priority.

The Bridge Brance of the Dept. of Highways informed that an inspection had been carried out, and that they recommended to council the following: Replacement of present bridge at S. W. 29-44-16, placed 300 feet north of the present bridge; Replacements of Culverts at S. W. 15-43-17 with a 30 foot concrete span, with 24 foot clear roadway; Remove existing decking and place string-ers at N. W. 17-43-13, the M. D. to re-deck the bridge; No action warranted at N. W. 28-46-15. Council went on record as approving the recommendations in the second and third instances, but that in the first instance a 36 foot clear roadway bridge be installed instead of 24 foot. A re-inspection was asked on item four.

Preliminary plans of proposed extensions to the Strome Rural Electrification Assn. were received from Farm Electric, and were approved.

Notice was received from the Minister in charge of Emergency Measures, that the annual conference would be held in Red Deer January 26, 27 and 28. The Reeve, a Councillor and the Co-ordinator were invited to attend. It was moved that these people attend the conference.

The meeting adjourned, to reconvene after lunch.

Information in connection with the ARDA Soil and Crop Management projects was received and discussed with Mr. Lee and Mr. Edwards. It was agreed that any action in this connection would be held in abeyance pending recommendation from the Agricultural Service Board.

The regular meeting of December 9th, was postponed to the 10th, due to other activities requiring the attendance of some councillors.

It was moved that the Reeve and Secretary be authorized to sign the contracts for each of the trucker-hauling gravel under the 1965-66 winter works program.

Mr. Whitehead, shop foreman, met with the council and informed that from information he had received, it would cost $6200 plus labor to repair the Torque and transmission in the Wagner 14A Earth Mover. After discussion it was moved that the foreman further check the equipment at Warren Equipment, and to attend the demonstration at Ferguson Equipment.

W.I. Members Pack Clothing Parcels

LOUGHEED — The Lougheed Women's Institute held their December meeting at the home of Mrs. Paul Sax with the president Mrs. M. Seeberg in the chair and ten members and one visitor present. The secretary Mrs. E. Pope read the minutes of the last meeting and reported the traveling basket on its way among the members and that two large parcels of good clothing had been sent to the Unitarian Service. Also a parcel of gifts had been sent to the Oliver Hospital Bazaar.

A letter from Mrs. Bielish, Provincial W.I. president was read. She urged a full drive for new members and also commented on the work that was being done by the Institutes.

The C.B.C. radio program, Country Magazine was discussed and it was decided that each member bring to the meeting what information they could from these programs for further discussion.

This being the last meeting of the year the secretary read the annual report and also the minutes of the last meeting. Mrs. O. Probst gave the treasurers report for the month as well as the annual one. Mrs. O. Probst took the chair for the election of officers which were as follows: President Mrs. M. Seeberg; Vice-president Mrs. G. Cosine; Secretary Mrs. W. Frost; Treasure Mrs. O. Probst. Directors were appointed and a time and place decided on for the directors meeting.

Christmas cards are to be sent to members who have moved away and a Unitarian project was discussed. It was decided that articles for a parcel be brought to the next meeting. A contest by Mrs. B. Probst and Miss M. Farnsworth was enjoyed and also an exchange of gifts.

At the close of the meeting a delicious and varied lunch supplied by the members was served by the hostess. The next meeting is to be at the home of Mrs. T. Clouston, Jan. 10 at 2:00 p.m.

B.R. League Start Now Dec. 20th

Weather and ice conditions permitting, the Battle River League officials have set Monday, December 20th as the date for the teams to get started on the current schedule. As is the usual custom the season will be "kicked off" with all teams seeing action.

Reports coming in to the Community Press indicate that the league this year will see most of the teams improved, having had their players coming back, and many of last year's rookies with a season of experience under their belts.

Arenas in the league are now ready, with ice making completed, and all teams are busy getting in practice sessions. Coaches say that their teams are ready for the opening games, and that spectators will be treated to a good brand of hockey this season.

WILSON'S WORRIES. A worried-looking British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, left, is driven to the House of Commons, to report on new developments in the Rhodesian situation. Wilson received wide powers to impose economic sanctions on the colony which declared unilateral independence. Wilson will likely discuss Rhodesia, as well as Vietnam, when he meets with President Johnson in Washington Dec. 17.

Legion Branch Makes Donations

4-H CLUB PLANS CHRISTMAS PARTY

The Merna 4-H Sewing Meeting of Dec. 6, 1965 opened with Joyce Anderson as chairman. After singing "O Canada", Valeri Sharman led in the 4-H Pledge.

For roll call each member told how the club could raise funds. It was put into a motion that for our Christmas Party we would invite the Merna 4-H Beef Club to a Skating Party on Dec. 20.

Hardisty Asks For Grain Quota

HARDISTY—The Council of the Town of Hardisty, in an endeavor to relieve the "tight labour" situation that has been existing at Hardisty for the past while, recently dispatched telegrams to the head of the Wheat Board, the C.P.P. and the Dominion Government.

Many farmers on the CNR rail lines have been enjoying a three and four bushel quota, while many areas on the C.P.R. have been restricted to a one bushel quota.

Hardisty, being at the edge of the so-called Alberta-Saskatchewan division, a sort of an in-between situation, has been without any quota at all for some time. At last report the CPR indicated that box cars would be available last week, but as one farmer put it, box cars are on no use without a quota. Perhaps by the time this appears in print the area will have a quota, and Santa Claus can make his rounds.

All Sedgewick Street Lights Being Converted

SEDGEWICK— At the regular Sedgewick Council meeting held Friday evening, it was decided to convert all the remaining street lights of the old style incandescent bulb type to the new mercury vapor lights. Most of the street lights in the town are already the mercury vapor type which give much greater illumination. In addition to these lights being changed, two new street lights will be added. One in the new sub-division located on the former golf course and the second on the corner of Bowell Avenue and Mackenzie Street.

A new Fire Chief was appointed by the Council. Mr. Lorne Peyser agreed to accept the position taking the place of Mr. Gordon Taylor who wished to retire after several years as Fire Chief.

Minutes of the November Council Meeting, the Recreation Centre Board, and the Gas Company were read and discussed at length.

A number of applications for plumbing and building permits and for the purchase of lots were dealt with.

Council decided to have a new Assessment Agency.

Councilor Eastly was appointed to serve on the Central Committee of the Flagstaff Emergency Measures Unit to represent the community.

Date for the Court of Revision was set by council to be held on Friday, January 21st, 1966 at the Secretary's Office.

Early Settler, Mrs. Olav Pederson Laid To Rest

KILLAM—Another pioneer of the Killam district, Mrs. Olav Pederson, passed away in Bethany Home in Camrose on Nov 29th. Helga Kolstad, was born Oct. 6, 1879 at Opdal, Norway. In 1906 she came with her parents and settled in Minnesota. On July 1, 1908 she was united in marriage to Olav Pederson at Westbrook, Minn. The same year they moved to Alberta and settled on their homestead eight miles South of Killam where they spent most of their married life. After leaving the farm they resided in Killam until 1957, when, on account of very poor health, Mrs. Pederson was admitted to the Bethany Home in Camrose where she remained until she responded to her Saviour's call to enter into the glorious life beyond the vale.

Mrs. Pederson was a charter member of Killam Baptist church.

Funeral services were held in the Baptist church on Dec. 2nd with Rev. A. Grymaloski officiating. A beautiful solo "Beyond the Sunset" was sung by Mr. Hearthey Heartburg. Mrs. Richard Sorensen presided at the organ. Pall bearers were 6 grandsons, Garry, Brian, Arnold, and Bobby Pederson, Wayne Cotton and Allan Frericks.

Mrs. Pederson was predeceased by 4 sons and 2 daughters, Harold, Jonas, Arnold, George, Halfred and Hilda (Mrs. Wm. Cotton). She leaves to mourn her passing, her loving husband, seven sons, Melvin of Victoria, Oscar of Killam, Elmer Elvin, Ervin and Victor of Edmonton, and Lucas of Vancouver; three daughters, Mrs. Signe York of Killam, Mrs. Aldica Gibson of Victoria and Mrs. Freda Frericks of Sedgewick. Touring New Zealand

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent).

We arrived in Auckland on November 30th on schedule. Although there is a paper shortage here it wasn't evident as we tried to get our car through customs. We stood at least a half dozen forms before the car was unloaded at five p.m. Customs closes at 4:30 so we had no choice but to sit in Auckland for the weekend. While there we heard one floor of the Auckland Domain. It is alleged to be the finest collection of Polynesian culture in the world. We are not authorities in this matter but we were impressed. In one room there was complete war canoe 35 feet in length and 15 feet high; also an original Whare or Maori Meeting House. We also saw the pine forks they used to eat "long pig" or human flesh. All other meat was eaten with the fingers, but human flesh was "Tapu" and could only be eaten at a distance. After two hours our feet were out before the building did, and we hope to see the rest before our boat pulls out. The Ben Wolters were on our minds when we toured the building as we are sure they would have enjoyed it.

We finally got our car on Monday afternoon after much sweating and we drove through Auckland on the wrong side of the road. Most people take their holidays between Dec. 15 and Jan 15, and we wanted to see the sights before the invasion. We toured the Thermal Area which is quiet active with geysers, boiling mud pools and active volcanoes and you get the idea that the whole area is going to blow up with a bang. The last eruption was in 1886 when an entire village was covered. It has since been excavated to show life as it was at that time. Also covered was a lake, and legend has it that a ghost canoe floated across the lake four days before the eruption and the Maori High Priest warned of the disaster the day before. After it happened the Maori people refused to let the white man dig him out for four days because they felt he was responsible. He was still living when found and survived in the ripe age of 110.

From Rotorua we made a side trip to the Bay of Plenty where we looked up relatives of the Black family of Lougheed. The Bay lives up to its name as it is very fat looking country, with farms looking very prosperous and well kept. Headed further south to the desert where the soil looks like furnace ashes. The speed limit is 80 but we averaged 25. The road engineer must have been paid by the bends, per mile The hills have been brushed to a height of 300 feet and sheep cling precariously to the darndest spots. They sure work for their living.

We went to Wellington where the land changes abruptly, being flat & dotted with wheat fields all nicely bonding out.

Tomorrow we catch the ferry for the south island where we will be for four weeks. We have been most impressed with what we have seen. Sheep are everywhere, hills are green and the people look even more prosperous than they do back home. We miss the good Canadian coffee most of all.—George and Beverly Davison.

St. John's W.A. Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of St. Johns W. A. was held in the Carch Hall on December 7th with the President, Mrs. Chapman in the chair.

All members were present except two and this was owing to illness and also other members of the congregation had been invited.

Routine business was disposed of and roll call answered. The W. A. made a substantial donation to the vestry to help with church expenses.

A letter was read from Oakhill Boys Home and it was decided to send 25 dollars to the Rev Ramsay Stewart for the same.

Mrs. Richmond and Mrs. Johnson offered to clear the church for Christmas.

Mr. Colbert donated two Christmas trees for use in the Church and Hall.

A gift of fruit is to be sent to the Flagstaff Lodge. There will be a carol service on Dec. 19th.

Mrs. Richmond then took the chair for the election of officers which resulted as follows: Pres. Mrs. Richmond; Vice Pres. Mrs. Pereira; Sec. Mrs. Culbert; Treas. Mrs. Clyde Clarke; Rich Visitor Mrs. Hannigan; Little Helpers' Sec. Mrs. Bottineau; Dorcas Sec. Mrs. Rouse; Press Sec. Mrs. Wheler.

After the election of officers games and contests were held arranged by Mrs. Slade and lunch was served bringing a very happy evening to a close.

The next meeting will be held on January 4th at the home of Mrs. Clyde Clark.

Catching Up On Basketball

SEDGEWICK—On November 12th the Central High basketball teams went to Alliance to test their skill against the Rebels. It was Central's first game of the season and they came away with a 14 to 9 win. The boys lost by a score of 54 to 36. Their shooting was good but Alliance dominated the play.

The teams went to Hardisty on November 26th. Here both the girls' and the boys' teams lost by scores of 23—6 and 62—18.

The next game was at home on December 3rd, when both teams played no-ah better basketball. The girls won 21 to 15 and the then undefeated Heister team. The boys dropped their game 69 to 23.

On December 10th Central played at home against Forestburg. The girls' game was a hard-fought battle with each team leading in turn. Taunton mounted in the last quarter with the score 11 to 10 for Central. Two quick baskets for Forestburg made the final score 15 to 11. The boys played an equally fast and exciting game, defeating Forestburg by a score of 39 to 67.

Competition is keen and team spirit good, as we go into the second half of the league after Christmas.

DO YOU KNOW!

THAT—the greatest loss to the economy of Canada is the annual exodus of 70,000 of our people to the U.S.A., most of them highly trained and educated.

THAT—the under-privileged people of the world turn to Communism because Democracy as we practice it today fails to provide an answer to their needs.

THAT—we have the alternative of using the Bank of Canada under free enterprise or else collapsing commercially into the hands of the Welfare or Socialistic State.

THAT—a Social Credit economy is the only alternative which will permit a truly individualist free enterprise democracy.

1880 PLANT NEWS!

All three Seed Plants in the Flagstaff M. D. held their annual meetings within the last two weeks. The meetings approved the actions of the boards over the past year.

Elections were held to fill the vacancies of the retiring members of the boards. Mr. Hugh Brodie and Mr. Herman Rowe are the new board members for the Strome Plant, replacing member S. Bohne and deceased member C. Jorgenson.

At Lougheed John Black was returned to the board, and Bill Huber was elected to replace retiring member Tom Clanston.

Gordon McPherson of Alliance was elected to the board of the Alliance Plant, replacing retiring member Bob Alcorn. Stan Jackson was returned to the board.

The meetings discussed the new price schedule adopted by the 3 plants and generally accepted the reasons for the change. We are happy to report that at this time all seed plants charges are ahead of last year by 2 to 4 weeks. Perhaps the weather has influenced the cleaning but we feel the new price schedule has helped to bring more grain in this fall.

FARM ACCOUNT BOOKS!

Last year the farmers of Flagstaff picked up 75 copies of the Prairie Provinces Farm Account Book from this office. We would recommend that you try this account book for 1966. We would be pleased to help farmers with the use of this account book.

Rev. and Mrs. Grymaloski were taking charge of the services at the Lashburgh Baptist Church.

The young people report that library books are now being donated to the library. Rather than exchanging cards among members of this congregation during the Christmas season it was decided to donate books to the Library. Among the ones already received are:

The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit — RenePache; Evolution Disproved—Dr. William A. Williams; The Saving Life of Christ—Maj. Ian Thomas; Danny Orlis and the Defiant Giant—Gilbert Morris; The Prisoner; The Brannans of Bar Lazy B —by Margaret Epp.

Many neighbors and friends gathered in the church auditorium on Friday night to honor Mr. and Mrs. T. Rott who were celebrating their silver wedding anniversary. The program consisted of special musical numbers, poems, presentations, and opening of gifts. The audiorium was suitably decorated for the occasion. We wish Freda and Ted many more years of happy wedded life.

We wish to extend our sincere sympathy to the "Abbott and Davidson families" on the sudden passing away of their mother, Mrs. Davidson.

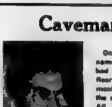
Caveman Comfort!

By Bert Odland



Once there was a caveman, whose name escapes me at the moment. He had a dandy new cave with wall to wall floor, the contemporary design harmonized with its environment. Even the stalactites had a modern chandelier. All in all, it was truly designed for gracious living, as they say in the ads.

In his efforts to improve his cave he rimmed the kitchen where air could hook in. He caulked and plugged and patched. He even made a right doorway from a sabre-tooth tiger skin (after considerable difficulty in persuading the tiger to vacate said skin).

He was pleased with it with an almost air-tight cave. And then his suffering really began.

He choked on smoke. He gagged on stale air. His wife burned some breakfasts and lunches (it must discourage wife, you know) and the smell lingered on for days. The place got dank and moldy. Well, you can be sure that not many centuries passed before the caveman stood up and left some openings so that air could circulate through the place.

I'm sad to report that there has been some backsliding of late. There are "modern" homes being built that have no provision for air circulation, other than opening a window (and who wants to do that in the dead of winter?).

We building, modern homes are insulated, weatherstripped, fitted with storm windows. How can air get in to eliminate stuiness, odors and excess humidity? Answer: It can't unless the heating system provides for air freshening and circulation. Because the air around you is the key to your comfort. Choose the heating that controls the air around you. Don't settle for caveman comfort.

Our Lennox heating and air conditioning systems are essentially all treating systems to get a fresh, invigorating climate in your home. Call us for a free estimate.

High School Ed. Survey Being Made

A special meeting was called by the Chairman for the purpose of drawing up the terms of reference for the High School educational survey requested from the Department by the Board. Waiver of notice of meeting was signed by all members of the board.

After some discussion the following preamble and terms of reference was adopted on motion of the chairman Russell Grant:

Board of trustees of the Killam School Division at a March meeting sought to alevtate the problems of poor quality high school services at Alliance and Galahad by requesting six School Buildings Board approval for further building at Alliance to allow for Centralization at Alliance.

Subsequent to this action, School Buildings Board suggested that an educational and building survey be requested by the Board to supply advice. This request was made, by by-law, for each survey to the south part of the Division.

Terms of Reference — The feasibility and advisability of centralizing high school service to Alliance and Galahad schools at either Alliance or Galahad.

The necessary additions, alterations and renovations required to provide adequate school plant at the site selected;

If the solution to improve school services in the south end of the Division does not lie in centralizing at either Alliance or Galahad, suggest alternative means of meeting the objective of offering in the schools as they presently exist, curriculation, and/or general programs; use of specialist travelling teachers in specialized subjects, and other means such as educational television to improve programs; Other high school centralization to which pupils may be transported.

The Nuggets got away to a fast start in the first period and were never seriously threatened throughout. Goals for the Nuggets were scored by, Tom Leslie assisted by Ken Bowran; Buster Pederson unassisted; John Anderson assisted by Merlin Arntzen; Gordie Muirhead unassisted, and Ken Bowran assisted by Tommy Leslie.

According to Mel McGeage the game could well have taken a different trend but for the fine goal keeping of Gordie Myrehaug, who made some sensational saves in the Nugget nets.

The first home game of the Nuggets is on Thursday, December 23rd, with starting time at 7:30 p.m. These young coming stars are coming up with some fine hockey and the public is urged to turn out for the games and lend support to minor leagues.

HIGH SCHOOL REPORT

KILLAM — The Board of the Killam School Division No. 22 will shortly be distributing through the schools condensed copies of a report of an investigation into the "Small High Schools in Alberta". It is hoped that all parents of school children will read the report.

The study of small High Schools in Alberta was initiated by the Alberta School Trustees of Alberta in the hope that a systematic inquiry into all aspects of the small high school issue might produce new insights, in turn, might help to resolve the conflict and, more important, point up procedures for ensuring that adequate educational opportunities are provided for the rural students of the Province. If the report provides a basis for further thought, study, debate and innovation in rural secondary education, it will have served its purpose.

A limited supply of additional copies may be obtained from the office.

CHARTERED BANKS NEED FREEDOM TO COMPETE

MONTREAL, Dec. 6 — Canadian chartered banks need "freedom to compete" if the financial system of this country is not to be grossly weakened, according to G Arnold Hart, chairman and president of the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. Hart told the bank's 143th annual meeting today that the draft banking legislation introduced earlier this year fails to take into account the vast changes that have occurred in recent years in the structure of the Canadian capital systems and the environment in which it operates.

Shareholders also heard R. D Mulholland, vice-president and chief general manager, report a record year's business, with assets of almost $6 billion at October 31.

REMOVE CEILING

Mr. Hart, in recommending removal of the 6 per cent ceiling on bank interest rates and advocating broader lending power for the banks, said, "I am not seeking to build a more powerful banking system at the expense of others in the financial community.

"The Canadian system of this century will be greatly weakened if the slow erosion of the position of the banks is allowed to continue," he stated. "What is required is the freedom to compete, not to dominate."

He said it was anomalous that, while the banks were limited to a 6 per cent ceiling on the rate they may charge for loans, institutions competing with the banks are paying no limit rate for deposits — clear evidence of distortions of financial markets by government Bank Act restrictions and of the need for change.

The changes already proposed "fail to face up to the fact that, while the legislative restrictions on the operations of the banks were designed primarily to protect the public interest and to facilitate monetary management, they no longer do so."

WEAKEN CONTROL

"By inhibiting the growth of the banks relative to other financial intermediaries which are not similarly subject to central control, they weaken and dilute that control.

"And, by preventing the banks from offering a full range of services at competitive prices, they force the public to seek more expensive accommodation elsewhere," Mr. Hart said.

The task of revising the Bank Act "should surely be accorded a high priority when Parliament reconvenes. Moreover, I would hope that we have seen the last of the timid approach to banking legislation displayed in the draft bill introduced this year and that we will have indeed a new Bank Act which really meets the demonstrated needs of the community at large.

"Nothing less than this will do if the banks are to play their full part in the growth and development of the Canadian economy." Mr. Hart stated.

NEW RECORDS

Mr. Mulholland reported record year-end assets of $4,987 million; deposits of $4,605 million; and earnings of $18,726,253; and loans of $3,161 million, passing the $3 billion mark for the first time in the bank's history.

Noting extremely keen competition for deposits, he said, "A point of view has been growing up, even among those who should know better, that . . . about the only thing that really mattered was the rate of interest offered." In fact, he pointed out, it was altogether too comfortable an assumption that all so-called "financial institutions" were equally creditworthy.

He emphasized that deposit rates, covering the "quite attractive rates now offered by banks", do not reflect the liquidity and security factors possessed by the carefully structured pattern of assets of the chartered banks.

"The problem of lending money requires not only skill and experience, but also the time and money needed to investigate the risk, plus acceptance of the fact that investigation is indeed necessary." Mr. Mulholland continued.

"I suggest that just because short-term funds have been freely available outside the banking system, too many borrowers have ended up with a disproportionate amount of their indebtedness at too short a term in relation to the nature of their operations.

"Such borrowers have also become overly dependent upon the vagaries of the short-term money market which heedlessly lacks the continuity of accommodation which is provided by bank financing, on the one hand, and by proper placement of long-term securities in the public market, on the other.

"Thus, tight-rope investing for the lenders is the tight-rope financing by borrowers." Mr. Mulholland stated.

N.E.S. Transformed

OTTAWA—Canada's Civil Service Commission has just conducted the largest examination in its history. Three thousand of those who wrote are already on the staff of the National Employment Service. Another 1,000 hope to be, in positions that will pay $4,080 and $6,180 to start, and increase to $8,080 and $7,220.

For those already with the N.E.S. the examinations will decide their future. They may be promoted, stay on the same level or be downgraded. Some might be advised to transfer to other jobs. There are several hundred new posts awaiting the successful candidates, all of them requiring university graduation and most graduate studies.

Quite obviously the N.E.S. is not after men only capable of helping jobless applicants fill out forms and sending them for interviews with prospective employers.

This is the first step in a major transformation of the National Employment Service which was transferred from the Unemployment Insurance Commission to the Labour Department last Spring. The next step may be a change to a more appropriate name, perhaps the National Manpower Commission. The N.E.S. is destined to play a major role in a reorganized and upgraded manpower program.

With unemployment down to about 3 per cent of the Canadian labour force Canada is obviously no longer facing an unemployment problem as it has been known. It is facing an employment problem which is a very different thing and subject to quite different treatment. The objective here is to use limited manpower resources in the most productive manner. The make work program has gone out the window except for those life winter boom building that are designed to move employment from the summer peak to the winter trough.

Manpower programs are not new to the Federal Department of Labour, in their present form they can be said to go back to 1961. In general the objectives were and still are:

1: To determine the future needs of industry in the labour market and see that future entries into the labour force will meet the shortages.

2: To retrain displaced workers to fit new needs of industry.

3: To plan in advance with industry for adjustments due to new technologies.

4: To provide opportunity for those in employment to upgrade their skills and knowledge or to get further basic education.

These of the four objectives dealing with education and training involve joint Federal-Provincial effort. The Federal Government has constructed a share of the capital cost of new technical and vocational schools on the secondary and post-secondary school level, a building program which is now nearing $1 billion. The schools have a capacity for 297,000 students and enrolment last March was 309,327, an increase of 88 per cent since 1962. About 30,000 students are being trained as technicians in post-secondary school institutions. Before 1970 technical training facilities in Canada will have to be quadrupled to meet the expected labour force needs.

Apprentice training, one of the most important in filling new labour market needs yet the slowest moving, had an enrolment at September 30, of 38,511, an increase of 51 per cent from 1961.

Other "in plant" training is being given to about 8,000. This represents serious lag in the program.

The major adult training program is the training of unemployed whose number have jumped about 30 per cent in the past year in spite of the cutback in unemployment. These courses are all prescribed by the National Employment Service and registration with the National Employment Service is required. Out of a total 220,000 unemployed (November 13) those in training courses numbered only about 40,000. These courses last six months to a year.

In spite of the healthy increase in numbers it is this field of unemployed training that needs most work if the labour force will meet the shortages.

The Manpower Consultative Service was organized in May 1964. It now has 10 projects for post planning with industry and workers under consideration. About 25,000 workers are involved. The M. C. S. invites industry, workers or both to seek its help in planning ahead for adjustments which are going to bring lay-offs. It has not yet solicited completely in either management or the unions but it is making progress.

In spite of this generally healthy look the manpower programs have been under heavy fire. some of it justified. It has been charged:

That the Labour Department failed to recognize the urgency and had become complacent.

That there was lack of co-ordination between programs.

That the National Employment Service was badly staffed and not doing the job.

That programs were misdirected.

If recognition of the faults and gaps is a step forward the Department has taken that step. It is recognized, for example, that in previous efforts to get men back in work crash programs have been set on foot that were totally inadequate. Today, with less unemployment a longer term view is being taken.

Curricula and teaching talent is being reviewed in the technical and vocational schools and training programs for specific trades which the Federal Government supplies to the provinces are being revised. There has been no revision for five years.

The Department is now doing considerable research to assess future needs as well as present shortcomings.

The charge of complacency, if once justified now appears to be not grand.

Prairie River Improvement & Management Evaluation

A long range plan of stream diversion and river improvement is being intensified by the water Resources Branch of the Alberta Department of Agriculture.

The initial steps in the program consist of an evaluation of methods for diverting water, including a diversion of water from the Clearwater Basin into the Red Deer River. If necessary water from the North Saskatchewan. Athabasca and Peace Rivers may ultimately be diverted into the South Saskatchewan River

The program is called the Prairie Rivers Improvement and Management Evaluation or P.R.I.M.E. It is the work of F. L. Grindly, Director of Water Resources, and his staff

According to Mr. Grindley, the plan is basically designed to store water in the headwater areas and distribute the stream flow generally in accordance with demand.

The basic premise of the planning is mind that the southern areas of the prairie provinces will always have troubles with some of the distribution When completed, the net result will be a firm-up of the winter flow in all our rivers including some streams that presently have little or no winter flow Damaging flood waters will be held back, irrigation will be abated, and substantial amounts of hydro-electric energy will be produced.

Water from the North Saskatchewan, Athabasca and Peace Rivers may eventually have to be diverted to replace the one million acre-foot of water used annually from the Clearwater Basin for irrigation in Alberta. This replacement of irrigation water by flood waters from the more northerly flows in our northern streams, says Mr Grindley, could be accomplished by gravity diversion canals built in conjunction with upstream storage dams.

It is stressed that this is a long range, multi-purpose water project to provide a firm water supply for irrigation, industrial, municipal and hydro power uses as well as flood control

The plan will be changed many times before construction

Details concerning the Saskatchewan-Nelson River Basin are not yet complete and must figure in the overall water policy.

In the evaluation and management of water resources the Provincial Government has accepted that the priority for water used should be (a) those uses directly necessary to human life — this means domestic and municipal use; (b) those uses which have no real substitute for water — irrigation and industrial use; (c) those uses of water which could be held back, if necessary — hydro and navigation; and (d) other beneficial uses of water such as recreation.

Twenty Years Of Peace!

It was approximately twenty years from the time of the end of the First World War until hostilities of a world-wide nature broke out again. It has now again been twenty years of peace, more or less, since the end of World War Two. According to the annals of history some two thousand Christmases have passed since peace on earth and good will among men was first given as a message to the world. But down through those 2000 years man has, and still is, crying for the peace which never exists. However, man is striving, and we believe, getting closer to the reality of peace, perhaps not so much in response to the ideal which Jesus preached, but because of the fear and the awful reality of what modern war can and will be.

Today Canada has soldiers on many foreign soils, not fighting, but disposed to help keep the peace. It is good omen that they are to doing for the United Nations and in the name of humanity. War has been kept at bay because men of good will are seriously at work to settle disputes at the conference tables, instead of by force. In attempts to keep nuclear arms under control, the disaster of war has been postponed in our day. Even though fighting has erupted in some parts of the globe, yet there is this joyful fact that world-wide conflict has been avoided for twenty years. The ravages of the jaws of starving it off still linger are now even brighter than ever, gives hope that there is no need for despair.

It is too much, we imagine, to expect that we are anywhere near the stage of perpetual peace, for injustice still hovers overhead, intolerance still runs rampant and hunger and poverty still stalk mankind, carrying with them the seeds of war.

Peace can only come from the heart of men, according to the philosophy of Christianity, and more and more hearts of human beings are today being bent toward the ancient message of peace on earth. It is not impossible that the song of peace and good-will which the angels sang so long ago, could be raised in joyous chorus at once again throughout the world.

The Editor, Publisher and Staff of the Community Press joins with you in the wish that this may become a reality. May joy be yours at Christmas time, and may peace and contentment follow in the New Year. That is our wish for all people, everywhere.

Why Not Ignore Them?

These people who march on Embassies, down in the street, and sprinkle pacifist literature, do so, for the most part, to gain attention. In this they are successfully administered with the assistance of head (line) hunters. It seems to be popular sport these days to tee off on the U.S. for almost any reason, from fighting the battles of democracy, to attempting to control their own economy. It is popular sport, it seems, to be anti-American. Surely the economic and physical truths are finally hammered home. You notice today that the small emergent nations are keeping pretty quiet and have stopped blasting off at the nation which affords them economic aid. It is a good lesson to learn; it is not good sound policy to bite the hand that feeds you. There are people in Canada, even among our leaders who might well heed the warning. If democracy is worth having it is worth defending, and at the moment the U.S. is the only nation doing much about it. Let communism continue to take over one country after another, and the day will come when their aggressive attitude will approach our own borders. Then the hue and cry will eminate from the mouths of babes that something should have been done about it long ago. The time to do something about it is now, and Canada could do worse than support the effort to curtail the activities of communism. Appeasers and pacifists still leave a bad taste in our mouths, for their activities are always one-sided.

Much Ado About Nothing!

Many were no doubt amused by the recent article by a columnist who rates front page booking, relating the lack of news out of Ottawa, what with the Prime Minister basking on the sunny sands, and the leader of the opposition remaining quiet (at least as much as his reduced political stature will allow). But it is also quite probable that many missed the real hidden significance of what the writer was attempting to put across. It was the fact that even with the scarcity of real news, some of our headline hungry columnists insist in trying to invent news where there is none. In other words making much ado about nothing. They've got the new federal cabinet all selected and the government staying in power for three or four years in spite of the minority situation. Manufacturing news where there isn't any can be a dangerous practice, and one which if persisted in can only contribute to the confusion of the public. And when there is there is enough of that as it is. There is enough of decency, of integrity, of charity and of honesty to fill pages being enacted every day across this land, which is completely ignored by the sensation writers. They seem unsatisfied until they can bust some sensational, underhanded, slimy and unethical procedures, which will gain a moving headline over their own by line. We suggest that such writers are doing this country a disservice. They may be selling newspapers but there is more to being a good writer than that, even if the newspaper does hand out the pay check.

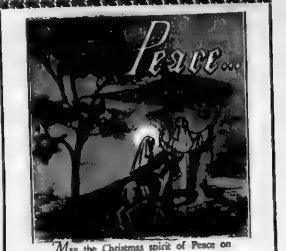
BOTH ARE DEAD

Ontario's Industrial Accident Prevention Association reported hearings of two men, working in different cities in western Ontario, who evenly resisted the use of seat belts even when their companies installed belts in their cars. Both men are dead. They were thrown from their cars in accidents and killed.

In spite of such proof as this, too many people still refuse to fasten seat belts when they drive or ride in a car. They close their minds to such facts as "30% of automobile fatalities occur within 25 miles of home and at speeds less than 40 miles an hour."



May the Christmas spirit of Peace on Earth come to dwell in the hearts of all.

On A South Seas Tour

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Hello Everybody.

We have spent a very hectic week since our last letter, and have come to the conclusion that they don't know how to build a straight road in this country. We arrived on the South Island on December 8th and headed for the West Coast. Rugged for a couple days at Nelson on the North Coast and took a few side trips. This is the centre of their tobacco and hops growing area, and is very interesting. Some fruit growing is also carried on in the area From here we headed through the Buller River Gorge to the West. The road is described as a major touring route in good condition. However if you can imagine the Fraser Canyon road being twice as long, just as high, one quarter as wide, not hard-surfaced, has twice as many curves and no side rails, construction crews around every or her bend, you have some idea of Beverly's nervous condition when we arrived at our destination. It took us 8 hours to go 280 miles. However it was an interesting trip, with glaciers all along the route. It was at one time the scene of a major gold rush. All that supports the area now are coal mines (all government owned) and some hardboard. Jade is also found in the area.

After being advised that the road continuing down the coast was just as bad, we headed inland for the East Coast and Christchurch (New Zealand). The road was very nice after our last experience, and winds for miles through typical "Apache" country. Hollywood should make a couple of Westerns here to give some relief from the hills they've been using for 30 years. We then came through the grain area of large (80 acres) fields. This is one of the pleasures of New Zealand, the scenery changing very abruptly in a matter of a few miles.

We arrived in Christ Church right in the middle of a traffic rush. It is a city of a quarter million people, and has just installed street lights (all six of them). Everything seems to go, and is no place for a good natured person to drive. Pedestrians have no right of way, so Jay walk anywhere, praying before they leave the curb. Bicycles are common, and we even saw one grey-haired lady riding a motor scooter.

It is becoming quite apparent that New Zealand is a socialist state. The government seems to control most things, particularly transportation and power Most of the natives are easy going and really don't give a hoot at getting anything accomplished. It is possibly a pleasant way to live, with no pressures to get ahead like there is at home, but you sometimes get the impression that they are somewhat like their flocks of sheep, existing only for food and reproduction, and waiting patiently for market day.

Material goods are about 20 years behind Canada and quite scarce, as is money to buy them. Food is about half the price in Canada but the wages are also that much smaller, giving them an advantage. However they seem quite content, so why should we worry?

Sorry, we run out of paper before we run out of news, so will close. —George and Beverly Davison.

AGRICULTURE IN 1965

Production of the third largest Canadian wheat crop on record, wheat experts second only to the record 1953-54 clearances, and the negotiation of further large wheat sales to the Soviet Union and China highlighted the agricultural year under review. Although output of most crops advanced over 1964 levels, fruit crops provided a notable exception, being sharply reduced because of severe winter kill. A buoyant market prevailed for hogs and cattle while in the dairy industry a virtual balance in the supply-demand position, was maintained. Farm cash income totalled $1,730 million in the first six months of 1965 and established a first half-year record for the fourth year in succession. As farm cash receipts in the last half of the year appear to be continuing at a good rate, farm cash income for the full year is expected to be at a high, if not record, level.

Canada's 1965 wheat crop is currently estimated at 677.9 million bushels, 13 per cent above the 1964 crop, Although the 28.3 million acres planted to wheat this year were about five per cent below last year's record acreage, improved yields more than offset this decline.

Canadian wheat experts during the 1964-65 crop year, which ended July 31, 1965, were 386.0 million bushels, 172 million bushels below the previous year's record export movement, but still the second largest in history. Exports of wheat flour were 31.4 million bushels, in terms of wheat equivalent. Thus, total experts of wheat and wheat flour, at 398.5 million bushels, were virtually on the 400 million bushel export target. Exports of the other major grains—oats, barley and rye —were below 1963-64 crop year levels with the major decline occurring in barley clearances.

At the morning service of St. Paul's United Church on Dec. 12th, a new carpet donated by the U.C.W., was dedicated by Rev. Zwicker. Presented by Mrs. A. Reimann, president of the UCW, the carpet was accepted on behalf of the Board of Stewards and the congregation by Mr. Leo Tennis. An anthem by the junior choir under the leadership of Mrs. F. Drager, added to the beauty of the service, with Mrs. Edworthy at the organ. In the evening the CGIT held their annual Vesper and Candlelight Service. This was beautifully done with the leaders, Mrs. Jean Garland and Karen McClemmans, and Susan Kramer in charge. Mr. Len Anderson sang a solo.

St Mark's W.A. held their December meeting at the home of Mrs. Trupp on Monday afternoon, with Mrs. Miles as hostess. Mrs. Mills led the devotional period. Donations were voted to Oakhill Boys Ranch, St. Alden's House and the Anglican Women's Training College. Following the business of the meeting, Rev. Steel presided for the election of officers with the following result: Pres., Mrs. Kitty Wells; Vice, Mrs. Lonnie Thorp; Secretary, Mrs. Betty Mills; Treasurer, Mrs. Josie Podlar.

Mrs. Mildred Frasier is visiting her daughter Gloria in California.

THAT—a Social Credit government would strive for a distinctive Canadian culture that will retain and further develop the cultural heritage Canada has acquired from citizens of different ethnic origin.

THAT—it would be the aim of a Social Credit government to provide practical leadership in assisting Canadian youth to recognize and exploit their potential talents and abilities for their own advancement and the good of mankind.

A SOCIAL CREDIT PRINCIPLE

THE SPIRITUAL VERITIES—no nation can be truly great or permanently strong unless its people recognize and acknowledge the eternal Deity, Sovereignty, and Righteousness of God and His overriruous right to man's worship and allegiance. Losses In Grain Crop Production Losses in grain crop production in the Prairie Provinces are of two types: (1) reduction in quantity and quality during production, storing and hauling of grains; and (2) deterioration in land that affects production immediately or over a period of years.

Henry Annual Losses. Disease continue to be a major hazard in grain crop production in the Prairie Provinces. A conservative estimate of the annual losses from all diseases of small grain crops is 10 per cent. The average annual loss caused by crop insects is not less than 8 per cent. Weeds cause an annual loss of at least 15 per cent. The preventable losses during harvest of grain crops is estimated at 5 per cent. Losses in storage from insects, molds, and other factors average about 3 per cent of the production each year. From the above causes alone, the average annual financial loss in grain crop production in the Prairie Provinces is at least $300,000,000.

Reducing Crop Losses. The possibility of profitably reducing or eliminating losses in grain crops is influenced by technical developments. The discovery of more effective or lower cost agricultural chemicals and of more efficient methods of application, for example, may make possible large production of higher quality grain at little or no extra cost to farmers. The heavy annual losses in grain crops in the Prairie Provinces from weeds, diseases, insects and other pests are due to the failure of many farmers to use recommended varieties ,approved agricultural chemicals, and improved tillage and cropping practices. It is true too that losses caused during harvest operations and those occurring during storage and handling grain can be prevented.

Today, in order to stay in business, grain growers must keep their unit production costs as low as possible. By reducing the enormous annual losses from crop pests through the use of chemical aids and known technical information, and by exercising more care in harvesting, storing and handling grain crops, prairie farmers can increase the total production of high quality grain and reduce their production costs. Now is a good time to plan how to reduce your grain crop production losses in 1966.

Odd Fellows Support Eye Bank And Research On Eye Diseases

On August 28th there was a meeting of the eye bank committee to consider a letter which was received from Dr. Silverstein who is in charge of the Odd Fellows World Eye Bank and Visual Research Foundation at John Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore.

The object of this report is for two purposes. First, to stimulate interest and draw attention to the public of the work the Odd Fellows are doing, and to show what progress has been made and what still can be accomplished. There are nine permanent employees in the research laboratory and early in September a pathologist and a physician were added. Also the internes who are studying to be eye doctors are doing research on eye diseases.

Two main branches on which the laboratory is investigating at present are, corneal transplant and allergic diseases of the the eye. In corneal transplant the experiments are designed to find out why the operation is unsuccessful in some cases after everything was performed by a competent surgeon. In allergic diseases the experiments are being conducted on animals in order to improve the treatment of these conditions. A third condition is the study of eye diseases occuring at birth. The animals which are used for these experiments are: mice, guinea pigs, rabbits, monkeys, and sheep. Glaucoma, cataracts an diabetes will be investigated later on as 60% of the cases involving blindness are caused by these diseases.

This is one of the most important projects ever undertaken by an organization to which Odd Fellows are pledged. Its possibilities are unlimited and eye sight will be given to many people who otherwise would be blind for life. It is costing Canada over 12 million dollars yearly to provide pensions, education, and care for the blind. This project is kept in operation by personal donations of Odd Fellows and Sister Rebekahs. These donations provide help for all who are affected by diseases of the eye. Many have already received help and are able to see again.

THE DEADLIEST OF WARS

There's a war in progress right now that will produce more casualties than the two great world wars. It makes the current cold war look like a Sunday School picnic. It is being fought on the home, in the schools, and on the streets, in every country in the world.

The war I'm talking about is the war between youth and age. There has been no declaration of war, no single incident which has provoked hostilities. But the fighting has begun, and its going to be a long, cruel destructive one before it ends. a war like no other the human race has seen.

The tragic thing is that it is not based on hate, but on something closer to love, a complete lack of understanding with a wistful desire for it, on both sides. It is not international or inter-racial war, but civil war, which makes it doubly [illegible]

In one front lines are not the children and the elderly Thank goodness for that. No. The opposing forces are the young adults, from about 15 to 25, on one side, and the no-longer-youthful adults, from 25 to 55 on the other.

What, you may ask, about those between, from 25 to 25? They don't even know the war is on. Busy producing and raising kids, they are blissfully unaware that they are producing reinforcements for the enemy they must face soon.

The war was inevitable. For 1,000 years, the majors managed to keep the miners under their thumbs. Through a combination of guile, economic pressure and sheer numbers (infant mortality was high), the elders kept the young in check.

They convinced them that age and wisdom were synonymous. They assured them that older men made better politicians, preachers, and generals. They kept the young from multiplying by tossing them cheerfully into the furnaces of whatever war was in progress at the time. While the old boys stayed home and looked after the store.

They refused to retire and let the young move up. They urged security rather than nothing. They preached compromise rather than courage. They tried to smother every flame of idealism with the cold water of what they called "reality."

Oh, the odd one broke through the blanket. Alexander the Great and William Pitt the younger, and Napoleon. But most of them died young.

And now, and to relate, Dad, you and I are reaping the bitter rice. Young people think exactly what I thought when I was a young person. that every living soul over 40 is inevitably opposed to anything that is fun, frightening or faltering.

Five thousan dyears of growing resentment is bursting forth in all directions. Thanks to medical advances, they now outnumber us. Thanks to economic prosperity, they live better than we ever did. Thanks to the cowardly and conformist world we created for them, they despise us. The hour is come, for them.

And you can't blame them much. We are against sex and liquor for minors, but think they're dandy for majors. We're against smoking, and pull our way straight into the oxygen tent. We tell them to be honest, and cheat on our income tax. We tell them to practice Christian charity, and rip our neighbors up the back.

We urge them to be mature, and we bicker and squabble in front of them, over trifles. We tell them they have an initiative, and refuse to let them do anything that is not safe, sensible and sanitary.

We throw up our hands in fear at their likes in dress and in music, at their popular heroes, at their natural desires. When they are polite, we grow pompous. When they are insolent, we grow furious.

Yep, the war is on. Don't worry. I'm not a traitor. I'll stick with the majors. I've always been a sucker for lost causes. And I have never yet left a sinking ship.

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR BULLETIN:

YOUNG BASHAW SINGER HONORED

Theresa Becher is a beautifully natural lyric soprano. She has proved herself a worthy Junior Citizen of the Year by unselfishly giving her talent to her community. She has performed for the enjoyment of others at Christmas Festivals, Rotary Club functions, variety concerts, school activities, weddings and wedding anniversaries.

At sixteen, Theresa passed two musical examinations with honors. She pays for her own singing lessons by working after school and on Saturdays at a local bakery.

The adjudicator in the Provincial Singing Finals stated, "Theresa is an artist. Her high notes are ravishing". She has brought great joy and recognition to her community by her dedication to her art.

We congratulate Theresa. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspaper Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility companies.

Pulitzer Prize Loser

By Bert Odland

Well, it's happened!
Just got word that I have not won the Pulitzer Prize for this column. Don't mean to sound complaining, but just what does Mr. Pulitzer want anyway?
Public service? Heavens, I've been explaining a whole new world of comfort to the public!
For instance, we've covered new Lennox central air-conditioning equipment that everyone can afford.
We've talked about how to save money and trouble on having heating and air conditioning installed and serviced.
To the point of hoping, I've explained how to get rid of stale air, dirty air. How to get quietness in a heating or air conditioning system.
Mr. Pulitzer! What is more important to the public good than health and comfort? I'll be waiting to hear from you next year.
Meanwhile, may I take this opportunity in behalf of Larry, Ray, Betty and myself, to wish you all a VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS and a HAPPY and PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR.
I'll be back again next year with these columns, to urge a grateful public on to greater indoor comfort.
You readers are grateful, aren't you? Well, aren't you? The best way to answer that question is to call me about your indoor comfort needs.
We'll show that Pulitzer fellow!

"A Christmas Thought'
To find Him like the Shepherds, as Saviour, blest, adored:
To own Him like the Wise Men, as sovereign and as Lord;
To bring Him first my worship, and then my gifts display.
This is the highest blessing which can be mine today!

The "Kind Kettles" Of Christmas Time

For many, a first real tingle of Christmas excitement is inspired by the sound of ringing bells at downtown street corners, and the appearance of Salvationists in their familiar uniforms, "manning" the Christmas Kettles.

As traditionally a part of the Christmas scene as mistletoe and holly, the Christmas Cheer Kettles cannot be taken for granted. They have an exciting history.

It all began on a stormy night shortly before Christmas, 1894. On the treacherous Pacific Coast, near San Francisco, a ship was driven onto the rocks by a severe wind. Shivering survivors were helped to shelter in a nearby Salvation Army building.

Since California, along with the rest of the continent, was in the grip of a never depression, The Salvation Army was hard put to care for the shipwrecked people, in the Army's shelter there were already many impoverished seamen and longshoremen.

The food supply was soon exhausted and the situation began to look desperate Then one of The Salvation Army lassies, bulking out the last few spoonfuls of soup, had an ingenious idea Stepping out into the bitter cold, she carried the soup cauldron itself to a busy street corner, set up a sign that said "Keep the Kettle Boiling", and rang a bell to attract attention. Those passing by — amused by the little sign — were to drop coins into the kettle and that night there was soup enough for all.

By the following year, word of the appeal of the kettle had spread. When Christmas time came around, thirty kettles were set up in towns along the West Coast of the United States to obtain needed help for the poor In 1897 the idea found its way to Boston where the kettles were "kept boiling" and 120,000 Christmas dinners were given to the needy there.

Since the kettle seemed to capture the imagination of those who wished to give to help others in the holiday season. it soon came to be a Christmas symbol of The Salvation Army throughout the U.S.A. and in Canada also. For in The Salvation Army Christmas is truly the observance of the birthday of Christ. and the giving of gifts to those who might otherwise be forgotten is part of a year-round devotion to work in His name among the less-fortunate.

For more than sixty years now out of The Salvation Army's bright red kettle has come happiness for millions of needy souls at Christmas time.

Shopping Skills

You can develop skillful shopping techniques which will help you judge the quality and suitability of home furnishings . . . find the best values for your money . . . decorate and furnish your home within your money management plan. To be a skilful shopper:

* know that what you want. Before you shop set up your requirements for individual purchases including color, material and design—durability—easy-care features — price. * gather helpful buying information. Look for information on items you intend to buy in home furnishing and women's magazines . . . newspapers . . . consumer publications . . . decorating books. When you shop take along pictures, fabric swatches, color samples and articles that can help you coordinate furnishings and make decisions. * buy from reliable stores. Shop in stores that provide the goods and services you want for the price you can pay . . . honest and informative advertising . . . informed, helpful sales people . . . reasonable policies on repairs, servicing and adjustments for unsatisfactory purchases . . . written guarantees . . . store services you want such as store shopping, delivery, installation, servicing.

* read labels, seals and tags. Look for information attached to merchandise which gives manufacturer's name . . . materials and construction methods used . . . finishes applied . . . use and care recommended . . . special features . . . guarantees included Keep labels tags and seals for reference when needed Use a checklist for this purpose * understand guarantees and warranties. Check the terms of warranties to know exactly what is guaranteed . . . how long it is effective . . . who is responsible for meeting the terms.

* ask questions. Find the information you need to make wise purchases by asking questions on materials, design, workmanship, durability, price, service, special features and upkeep.

* inspect merchandise. Sit in chairs and sofas . . . feel fabrics . . . check colors in daylight as well as in store light . . . pull out drawers and open doors . . . pull out sleeper-sofas . . . check joint construction . . . rock furniture to test sturdiness . . . switch lamps on and off . . . check sizes.

* compare prices and quality. Shop in several stores to compare values in home furnishings before you buy.

Developing good shopping techniques will help you to make satisfactory purchases. The following money saving ideas may assist you in keeping home furnishing expenses at a minimum.

* Second hand furniture of good quality may be a more economical purchase than low quality new furniture You may find what you want in second hand shops . . . at auctions . . . at sales from model homes or apartments . . . through want-ads in local papers . . . from friends who have furnishings to sell. It is wise to inspect the furniture carefully and to learn as much as possible about the use it has received. There are usually no guarantees, warranties or refunds on second hand furniture.

* Unfinished furniture may offer an opportunity to save money if you are reasonably skilful at finishing furniture. Compare the prices of similar pieces, finished and unfinished. Remember to add the price of equipment and material required for finishing pieces yourself.

* Seconds or slightly damaged furniture can be economical. Fine furniture, slightly marred in shipping or handling, is often sold at greatly reduced prices. Be sure you know the full extent of the damages and the cost of repairs before you buy.

* Furniture sales offer excellent money saving opportunities. February and August are the big months for clearances in home furnishings However individual stores may hold special sales at any time. Watch local newspapers for information on sales and special events.

* Personal skills applied to decorating your home can cut costs, if you are reasonably skilled. Many homemakers tailor their own draperies . . . upholster furniture . . . cover pillows . . . paint or refinish furniture. Your skills may even include painting walls, hanging paper, laying tile or building furniture.

Pity Poor Mom At Christmas Time

(By Veronica Mahlstein)

Soon the gifts will be opened, the meal will be eaten, and instead of Christmas carols, everyone will be singing the After-Christmas Blues.

It's a sad fact that the year's biggest holiday is followed by an even bigger anticlimax. Since November, the whole family has been buoyed up by a feeling of anticipation as heady as opium.

While mother worked frantically over the kitchen stove, father put up the Christmas tree, junior pulled it down while playing Tarzan, and Aunt Jane and little Mark hollered songs about an [illegible] reindeer called Rudolph.

Santa Clauses manifested themselves on every street corner and department store prices rose like a thermometer in hot water.

Then suddenly it's over. A sinister hangover replaces the intoxicating spirit of Christmas. The exciting count-down of remaining shopping days is a thing of the past.

The turkey is dry, the mince pie is stale and cards are carting at the pages. Angel hair from the tree covers everything from the carpet to the dog and traces of it will still be found from time to time in mother's bat box, or providing a ready-made home for spiders in the linen closet.

AFTERMATH

The grim aftermath will take its toll of the family. Father's digestion and his waistline show the effects of too much plum pudding. Junior and Janie return to their state of war with new vigor, after a temporary truce for the holiday season.

Even baby Mark views his brand-new Teddy Seal with suspicion, knowing that it heralds all kinds of unpleasant events in the future.

Mother not only has to mother ruffled feathers, but to deal with her boss after Christmas blues. It's time to start house-hunting and cooking again, this time for the New Year. There are a dozen duties to be written thanking relatives for useless cushion covers and pot holders. And the stain in the lace table cloth must be removed before January 1.

She must now return to the toy store that she so recently left and convince a skeptical clerk that the doll's eyes were punched in by a careless delivery boy and not by little Janie when she discovered it didn't say "mama".

While she's downtown, she notes with annoyance that the pretty purse that she paid $2.98 for just before Christmas are now practically being given away for cereal box tops. And the elegant, pink-striped ascot that the sales clerk had sworn to be the only one in the city, if not in the whole country, is lying dingy and discarded with a dozen like it on a table marked "Reduced to clear."

TREE GAME

Meanwhile, at home, the annual game called "Who's going to strip the Christmas tree" is in progress. The rules are simple: The object is to always have something of great importance to do so mother will end up doing it as she did last year.

Another is playing a game of her own in the kitchen. This one involves inventing ways to disguise the turkey so that the family will finish it by February. Let's see—Turkey a la King, turkey croquets, turkey tiermisher, mustard pate de turkey au gratin . . .

Then there's the problem of getting Junior to thank Auntie Flo for his Winnie the Pooh book. Auntie believes that any boy who doesn't read the Pooh books is destined for juvenile delinquency. Junior, however, has traded his copy with the boy next door for 20 hockey buttons.

Mother must retrieve it before Auntie finds out. She finally buys a new one, after tracing the original to a boy who has left for South America with his parents.

PERPETUAL CHRISTMAS

With the even smaller fry it's sometimes necessary to deal with certain misconceptions that arise at Christmas time. Like the delusions of grandeur brought on by the sudden riches of Christmas morning and his idea that Santa's bounty extends for all 365 days of the year.

Questions like, "How come Santy Claus didn't bring me nuffink this morning? must be treated tactfully, mother finds.

Meanwhile, father, shocked by the size of the post-Christmas bank balance, has decided to economize.

This means he must not buy next year's presents now, while the sales are on. So once again she battles the downtown shoppers for dolls, model cars and cuddly animals, which are hidden carefully from the prying eyes of the children. Within a week, however, the spoils have been found and claimed and it is no use pleading that they must be saved for next Christmas. Every kid knows that Santa provides the presents and will keep on doing so, with or without Mummy's help.

BLACKMAIL

Junior, who doesn't believe in Santa Claus anyway, gets to keep his share of the loot by the simple method of blackmail — "I'll tell Mark and Janie about Santa."

Rather then be responsible for two childhood traumas, mother gives in.

Eventually, Christmas gives way to the New Year, and life returns to normal. Father has gotten a life-saving raise, the kids are back at school, and little Mark has forgotten that Santa ever existed.

Mother gives a heartfelt sigh and leans back to enjoy a well-earned rest. At least until it's time for chocolate eggs and Easter Bunnies.

Peaceful as a snowy landscape, lively as a playful fawn is the Christmas we wish for you. We are ever grateful to you for your thoughtful consideration and gracious patronage.

FROSTBITE!

Aside from "nipping of the nose and biting of the toes," over-exposure to cold can cause extreme pain, disabling injuries, and even the loss of fingers, toes, and other body members.

Although most people recognize frostbite as a [illegible] of [illegible] and temperatures, few realize that wind also plays an important role. Since wind tends to drive heat out of the body quicker than if the air were quiet, frostbite can occur at temperatures normally not considered hazardous and it can do it in a relatively short time. From the accompanying table one can see that as the wind increases, frostbite can occur in increasingly higher temperatures.

5 m.p.h. —25 degrees F.; 10 m.p.h. —10 Degrees F.; 15 m.p.h. 0 degrees F.; 20 m.p.h. 5 degrees F.; 25 m.p.h. 9 degrees F.; 30 m.p.h. 12 degrees F.

So before sending the little ones off to school or out to play, make sure they are dressed for the weather with proper ear muffs, hood, and foot protection and make sure that they're not out too long.

How Reindeer Replaced Santa's Horse

(By Jilleen Coy)

To children in the Netherlands, the happiest sound at Christmas would probably be that of a horse clopping about on their rooftop.

For the sound of that horse's hoofs would mean that St. Nicholas had at last arrived with his load of toys and candies.

In the Netherlands it is a great white horse, and not a team of reindeer, that carries St. Nicholas from roof to roof. Mythology tells us this is because a horse is faster.

And Dutch children, on the eve of Dec 23 leave their wooden shoes filled with hay for the horse, to make sure it has enough energy to carry St. Nicholas through his journey.

Canadian youngsters would likely find it hard to accept a horse as Santa's steed. They have been taught that his sled is pulled by a team of magic reindeer, with such delightful names as Dancer and Prancer, Dasher and Vixen.

In some ways, the horse makes more sense than reindeer. The original St. Nicholas lived in Asia Minor, and it is unlikely he ever heard of reindeer, let alone rode with them.

FROM LAPLAND

We have the people of Lapland to thank for adding reindeer to our image of Santa Claus.

The Russians were the first to accept St. Nicholas as a patron saint, and from Russia the idea spread to Lapland. The Lapps are famous for their reindeer teams, and it was only natural that the Lapp children believed the Christmas saint would assemble his own team to haul his great load of toys over the winter snow.

It was also in Lapland that the idea evolved that St. Nicholas lived at the North Pole.

This helped strengthen the belief that St. Nicholas uses reindeer to pull his sleigh. After all, any Lapp child knew that a horse could not possibly survive the winters of the North Pole.

On the other hand, the Lapp children believed that reindeer could survive. After all, reindeer are among the world's most northerly living animals, and the Lapps themselves tended herds north of the Arctic Circle.

Lapp children also knew that reindeer would probably be Santa's choice at his North Pole workshop because they require absolutely no shelter from even the worst winds of winter, and can live almost entirely on reindeer moss, a gray lichen that grows in the north.

GOOD GRIP

Furthermore, reindeer travel well on ice and snow because of their broad and deeply cloven hoofs which spread out for a better grip when pressed down on a hard surface.

And any Lapp child could tell you that reindeer are the fastest animals on ice, capable of pulling a sled over a slippery surface as fast as ten miles an hour.

How fast can reindeer fly? That, the Lapp children admit reluctantly admit, is a question only St. Nicholas can answer.

The Lapland-style Santa Claus was gradually accepted throughout Scandinavia.

TOOK TIME

But it took many years before he became accepted in North America

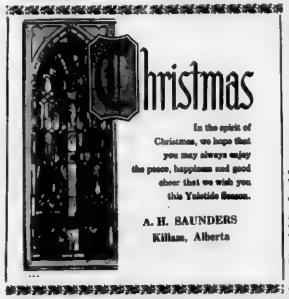
Up to about 150 years ago, the Dutch version of St. Nicholas was most popular on our continent.

In 1808, for example, American writer Washington Irving writes of St. Nicholas riding in a wagon which is pulled by a horse.

But the reindeer were well in the picture by 1822, when another American, Clement Moore, wrote a poem describing St. Nicholas and his "eight tiny reindeer" and "miniature sleigh."

By about 1860, cartoonist Thomas Nast gave Santa permanent possession of reindeer and sleigh through his Christmas drawings for magazines.

Today in Canada, the reindeer has found a firm foothold in our Christmas tradition. Leaping through the sky, pulling Santa in his sleigh, they have become one of the most popular of our Christmas symbols



Falls In Home Are Greatest Danger

Falls account for 45 per cent of home accidents, with fire close behind, according to the National Safety League. NSL offers some ideas to keep tragedy out of the home at Christmas.

Keep walks and steps free of ice and snow

Keep displays and decorations clear of walks pathways and doorways.

Don't carry a pile of packages to obstruct vision.

Keep packages on easy-to-reach shelves or in drawers, never on floors or stairs where they can trip someone.

Give the children a box or bag for gifts. Toys scattered around the house may send Grandma tumbling.

Use a sturdy ladder, never a makeshift such as a chair or piled books or boxes.

Never reach from a ladder. Get down a taller or with longer arms to put the star on the tree top.

Holidays always increase fire hazards around the home, calims NSL. Fires, burns and fireassociated accidents accounted for 23 per cent of last year's home fatality victims. For Christcas, the League suggests:

Keep the tree in water so it will stay green and be less vulnerable to fire.

Never place candles near tree, curtains or other flammable materials. Use hurricane lamps over them for safety and added attractiveness.

Keep matches in hard-to-open containers away from children.

Discard frayed electric cords before a short-circuit produces shock or fire. Make sure lighting sets carry CSA labels.

Use nonflammable materials (metal, glass, asbestos) for decorations wherever possible. Be sure combustible materials are flameproof.

Never use electric light sets on metal trees. Use off-colored spotlights or floodlights instead. A voltage leak can bring death, destruction or suffering in an instant.

Decorations and trees can be hazards to children. They chew ornaments, light bulbs or any bright object that looks good enough to eat. This could result in tragedy.

Parents are responsible for their own children and visiting children. Make sure to cover empty electric sockets or outlets on trees and decorations and make certain decorations are securely fastened.

Firearms received as Christmas gifts call for particular care. More than half all fatal firearm accidents occur in the home. Be sure they are not loaded in the house and never leave them within reach of children.

When Christmas is over, hazards remain. Dispose of wrappings at once. Place them in a metal-covered trash can or burn them without delay. Dispose of the Christmas tree. If the municipality designates tree disposal, follow the rules. Otherwise take it to an open area and burn it, keeping a fire-extinguisher handy. Dry trees sometimes burn with explosive violence. Dispose, too, of dried-out decorations.

"If Canada's 19,880,000 people each assumed the moral responsibility of being 'his brothe' keeper', said Gay McLaren, General Manager or NSL. "Christmas would not be blighted by hundreds of deaths and injuries."

Share With Others

(By Commissioner Edgar Grinsted)
(Leader of The Salvation Army in Canada and Bermuda)

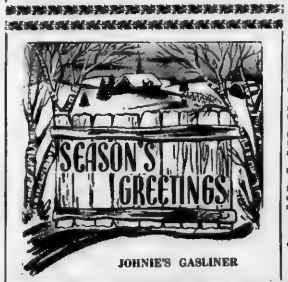
Sharing is one of life's privileges.

If we could not share Christmas with friends and loved ones, the season would be bleak and lonely indeed.

In fact, we enjoy MOST what we SHARE with others — the holiday meal, gifts, cards, and the festive preparations at home and office. And indeed it is the joy of SHARE. that CHRISTMAS has real meaning for us, as in this singularly Sacred Season, we commemorate the "Wondrous Gift" that was given to mankind so many centuries ago.

The season's festivities have a warmer glow when we include in our Christmas sharing, those who so easily might be forgotten in the rush and pre-occupation of Yuletide preparation — lonely Senior Citizens, homeless men, underprivileged children, unwed mothers, families in need, and many others.

It is my prayer that you will make this Christmas truly a time of sharing — not just in a monetary sense, but in a most personal way — sharing your very best of mind and spirit with others. As you do this, I am confident the miracle of this celebrated Season will bring to you as it did to Dickens' immortal Scrooge the joy of saying — "AND TO ALL A MERRY CHRISTMAS"



PEACE ON EARTH

Somebody goofed. Everybody knows that it's "peace on earth" you take about at Christmas time. All you have to do is to check your Christmas cards, your Christmas carol song sheet, the signs in the department stores—or even your Bible! There is black and white or red and green, you'll find it — "Peace on earth!"

But wait—or back, if you prefer. Peace on earth is a type of graphic error made on purpose to draw your attention to some disturbing truth. Just look around. There are many human hate will be overcoming ably a little piece of Christmas this year. For instance: there are the HER in asia and africa with the protruding bellies — the frightful curve of starvation. In Canada, a similar kind of hollow configuration means something quite different. Different — like turkey, cranberries and mince pie. What these starving children could do with a piece of Canada's plenty — even the overflow into the garbage cans!

Then there are the lonely and anxiety-ridden. The suicide rate goes up at Christmas time. The small, one-roomed dwelling seems more cramped — perhaps because of all the spaces taken up by the loneliest carefully checked through the Christmas Cheer Index. What the belated and the isolated could do with a piece of real relationship. Friendship, love, understanding and sympathy should come gift-wrapped too.

And don't forget the people in the blacklisting and surveillance nations identified by labels such as Rhodesians or Mohawks), who are striving after a piece of freedom. By the way, when you use pieces as an active verb, it means put together, sew into a whole. And that's Christmas in all its Christ centering into the world to join mankind together into a harmonious wholeness.

"To men of good will . . ."

For people brought up, as many are, to know the Bible only in the King James' version, the angels' proclamation at Christmas is remembered as: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill towards men."

But it is entirely likely that those words do not represent exactly the original of the song were Bethlehem. The study of ancient manuscripts of Holy Scripture, many of them undiscovered when the Authorized Version was put forth at the start of the 17th century, to become known and loved by succeeding generations of English-speaking people, has led scholars to suggest that two alternative versions have better support. One is "Peace on earth, to men of good will", and the other is "peace on earth among those in whom He is well pleased." Today many modern Bibles follow one or another of these in preference to King James. The change in meaning is suggestive and helpful.

We who live in what is sometimes called a "throw away state" easily get into the state of mind in which we expect everything to be done for us, without effort or initiative on our own part. Religiously, we sit back and expect God to do everything while we do nothing. And the peace of God, that peace which is much more than the mere absence of war, is treated as a kind of blanket donation from heaven. "Peace, goodwill towards men" becomes an amiable outpouring, indiscriminately upon all, of the divine benevolence.

How much better to believe that God does indeed give His peace — but to those who have made themselves ready to receive it, to "men of good will," to "men in whom He is well pleased," because they have signified a willingness to make their own wills one with His. There is nothing wrong in suggesting that. But it does remind men to bestir themselves and to seek, by an act of their own wills reaching up to meet the will of God, the "peace of God which passeth all understanding." St. John reminds those who read the introduction to the Fourth Gospel that the fullness of the divine gift is "to as many as received him."

Peace, then, is a conditional thing. Do we fulfil the condition?

Best wishes to all for a joyous Christmas.

Christmas Message From J. Percy Page

(By Lt. Gov. J. Percy Page)

Memories of former Christmases always come crowding upon us with each passing year. We think of all the jolly times we had when we were very young, when we were in our teens, and when we entered the world of grown-up people. Most of all, we remember when we listened as little children about the first Christmas and the heavenly host that heralded the birth of Jesus in a stable at Bethlehem, almost two thousand years ago.

It is a strange and wonderful thing that, all through history, Christmas has always been associated with gatherings of friends and families, of singing joyful carols and sharing our gifts with those less fortunate than ourselves.

From the early days of settlement in Canada, our pioneers always celebrated Christmas in typical fashion. They'd like to share but good wishes, but the spirit of Christmas was always present.

Well, Edmonton and Alberta have both come a long way since those pioneer days. We are becoming strongly urbanized, and the outward signs of Christmas are perhaps more gaudy than some of those described by early writers. But the inward things remain the same, for Christmas is unchangeable. Deep in our hearts we know it is the birthday of Jesus, a time of family gathering and goodwill among men.

Let us remember that as we mark the Christmas season this year. Through all the years it has meant the love of God and the love of our fellowmen. This is what the great Charles Dickens meant when he had one of his characters, Bob Crachett, say:

"A Merry Christmas to all, my dears. God bless us every one."

Memo To Party Givers

Here's a memo to sponsors of Christmas office parties from the Alberta Safety Council.

"Keep the cork in the bottle — the family happiness you save may be one of your employee's".

This reminder is given by the safety council today urging business and industry to keep office parties dry during the holidays.

"Office togetherness is okay", the council said, "but not if it jeopardizes family togetherness".

"There can't be peace on the highway and good will in the home when Dad gets woozy at the office," the council reminds. Its supporters in business and industry.

And the same goes for career girls. "The secretary struck down by a car on the way home may have been the one standing under the office mistletoe a few minutes earlier".

Surveys reveal the deadliest traffic hours of Christmas are between 6 and 8 p.m. Christmas Eve when workers are rushing home and the holiday shopping is done.

Depending on the coffee urn to sober up is a fallacy warns the council. "7-Heat — HOT COFFEE— IS THE ONLY CURE. It takes three hours for the alcohol from just two cocktails to disappear from the blood stream."

For all drinkers, office or otherwise, the council has this to say: "Roughly 45 per cent of the invalid recorded during the yuletide season in traffic accidents involve straight drivers — ample evidence that the cocktail hour should not precede the driving home hour, whether from office or neighbourhood party."

Stamp To Honor Canadian Satellite Alouette 2

A stamp to honour the recently launched Alouette 2 satellite will be issued on 5th January 1966, the Postmaster General announced today.

The Alouette 2 is a Canadian satellite developed by the Defence Research Telecommunications Establishment and the National Research Council. It was launched in California as part of a Canadian-American program of space research.

The two main purposes of the satellite are to measure the hour to hour electron densities at the height of the satellite; to listen to the very low frequency noise in the range of 1 to 10 Kc/s and to measure primary cosmic ray particles outside the earth's atmosphere, including electrons, protons and alpha particles.

This 5c stamp was designed and printed by the Canadian Bank Note Company of Ottawa from data provided by the Defence Research Telecommunications Establishment. The stamp features an artist's interpretation of the Alouette 2 orbiting over the globe. A partial section of Canadian territory is visible. The colour will be blue. A total of 25 million will be issued.

FARMSTEAD PLANNING AND BEAUTIFICATION!

Be sure to tune in to "This Beautiful Province Of Farming" at 10 30 a.m. on Monday, January 10th for the latest information on farmstead planning and beautification, presented by specialists in this field.

Co-ordinated by the Alberta Dept. of Agriculture, this program is the first of a series to be carried on all CBC and affiliated TV stations from January 10th to 14th. Many of the principles of good farmstead planning and beautification are illustrated by photographs of farms in different parts of the province. In several cases the pictures were taken by helicopter.

P. D. Hargrave, Supt. of Brooks Horticultural Station, starts the program off with a general outline of the principles involved in farmstead beautification. His farmstead model is used to illustrate many of these principles.

J. L. Reid, Alberta's Senior Extension Engineer, deals with the technical aspects of drainage, erosion, wind direction, roads, building locations and so on, as they pertain to the overall farmstead plan. A well planned farmstead should ensure that the maximum amount of work is accomplished with the minimum amount of labour.

Mr. Reid uses several farms to illustrate his points. They include a half section with a relatively low cost hog set-up belonging to Joe Bahry of Athabasca; the Les Olson farm at Fairview which is slightly larger and takes advantage of natural shelter, the Gordon Balhorn farm at Wetaskiwin which depicts a good labor saving layout plan, and the Bob Edgar dairy at Red Deer which illustrates the ultimate in mechanization.

P. D. McCalla, Supervisor of Horticulture with the Alberta Department of Agriculture, deals with the horticultural side of farmstead planning. He discusses shelterbelts from the point of view of their location to buildings, the number of rows required, the recommended distance between rows and trees, care of trees, types of trees to use and where to get them. He also discusses lawns and factors to keep in mind when landscaping a garden. These include choosing the location, the size of the area, the type of grass/shrub to plant. He uses Mr. Walter Krause's farm at Wetaskiwin to illustrate many of the principles of farmstead beautification.

Dianne Hammer, Home Design Specialist with the provincial Extension Service concentrates on the farm home in its relation to the rest of the farmstead. She outlines factors involved in choosing the location of rooms, doors and windows to take advantage of the location and to save labour. She uses Clarence Visser's farm at Fort Saskatchewan and the Jules Bruggman farm at Leduc for her illustration.

Other programs to be seen on the telecourse, "This Business of Farming" during the week of January 10 include "Wintering the Beef Herd", "Small Farm Improvement", "Income Stabilization", and "Farm Business Organization". The series is produced by the three prairie provinces in co-operation with the CBC.

Christmas Legend

Once upon a time, a poor woodcutter and his family lived in a little hut deep in the forest. Times were hard and sometimes there was not enough to eat in the little house. But the family was content, and grateful for what they had.

One Christmas Eve they gathered about the table to eat their meager supper. A wild storm was raging outside. Suddenly there was a knocking at the door.

Outside in the snow was a little boy, scantily dressed and shivering with cold.

"Come in, child," said the woodcutter's wife. "We do not have much, but you are welcome to share it, and you can sleep in the children's warm bed."

The child entered [illegible] and after eating a few mouthfuls, fell sound asleep.

In the middle of the night the woodcutter and his family awakened to beautiful music.

This great sound in the midst of a dazzling light, like new rays changed into a shimmering crystal. They realized He was the Christ Child.

Taking a fir branch from the fireplace, He thrust it into the ground outside the door. "This is My gift to you, in return for your kindness. Henceforth this tree shall always be green and bear fruit. Never again will you go hungry at this season."

When He had spoken, He disappeared. But the evergreen tree grew tall and strong, and the woodcutter and his family never went hungry again.

They Followed Their Star

But Was It Because Of A Mistake? There came wisemen . . . saying We have seen His star and are COME TO WORSHIP. Matt. 2:1, 2.

(By Jane Scott)

The wisemen from the East have been immortalized by Holy Writ, but they have also been popularized by a more modern poet. When John H. Hopkins wrote the carol: "We Three Kings of Orient Are", in 1857, he started a chain reaction which is having repercussions to-day.

Thousands of children and older folks have been tripped up on the question: How many wisemen came to worship Jesus?

Invariably they reply — Three. Thus revealing their ignorance of scripture and their familiarity with the carols, many of which take liberties with the poet's license.

HIS MISSTEPS

The Bible does not mention the number three, but it confirms the fact that wisemen did visit the Christ child to worship Him as King.

It also gives credence to Matthew's account of the birth of Jesus, which coincided with the reign and death of Herod 1 (called the great). His father made him governor of Galilee about 50 B.C. He it was who ordered the massacre of the Innocents in 4 B.C., the year Jesus was born.

He died the same year and his kingdom was divided among his sons, Archelaus, Herod Antipas and Phillip. Only Matthew records the story of the wisemen and the star, and the visit of the angel to Mary and Joseph and the warning dream that led the wisemen to conceal their knowledge from scheming, suspicious Herod.

The birth of Jesus was of international interest. The ancient Jews had been carried into captivity with their sacred scrolls, containing the prophetic declaration of the coming of their promised King and Messiah.

Wisemen from the East were interested in the Hebrew books of the law, in astronomy and astrology. They were open minded seekers after the truth, accepting the Hebrew writings at face value. They were familiar with the prophecy recorded in Numbers 24: 15-19 which spoke of the "man whose eyes" had been opened and who had seen a vision, the prophets words: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel . . . Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion . . ."

HUMAN 'STAR'

But like many people in our day, the wisemen had confused the fiery stars that compose the galaxies of heaven with the famous human stars who rise upon the world stage, to play important roles in the drama of the ages. But they were serious students of both prophecy and astronomy and God rewarded their search for truth and overruled their ignorance and led them by a star to the place where the young child was, for God knew, as He knows today that their intentions and motives were pure, for had He not spoken: "And ye shall seek me, and ye shall find me when ye shall search for me with all your heart." Je. 29:13.

What the wisemen lacked in knowledge they made up in sincerity and good intentions. They journeyed far, carrying gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh, prepared at any moment to fall at the feet of the newborn King and worship Him in spirit and in truth.

But where would they find Him? Scanning the heaven their eyes focused upon a star of first magnitude. They had never seen it before. Immediately they associated the heavenly body with the prophetic word: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and they turned their footsteps toward Jerusalem and the unusual star went before them."

Many speculate that the star was a conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in retrograde motion. There is a period when the planets appear to stand still before moving backward or forward. There is no evidence that this was the case, but the wisemen believed that the new star was the divine indicator that a King had been born, and they were not disillusioned, for they found the child and worshipped Him and gave Him gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh.

ANOTHERIC WARNING!

Being in the way God led them and He warned them not to return to Herod who through his counselors had directed them to Bethlehem. Wisemen, indeed, they hearkened to the voice of God and returned another way into their own country. Thus thwarting the diabolical plans of Herod to kill the child Jesus who might challenge his right to reign over the Sons of Jacob.

Maddened by the cunning of the wisemen, Herod, "When he saw that he was mocked, was exceeding wroth and sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wisemen."

Again the turbulent world pauses to review the message of Christmas. Again scheming rulers whose rights are challenged by the Star of Jacob, will seek to destroy Him, but wisemen will come from the East and the West and the North and the South to worship Him in spirit and in truth. No power on earth shall prevail against the Son of God who came as a baby to demonstrate God's love and redeem His people.

It is no more possible to extinguish His light than to extinguish the star that guided the wisemen. Sooner or later, we believe, all men will bow before Him and crown Him Lord of all.

Test Your Christmas Knowledge

(By Jane Slegar)

Christmas customs, as we celebrate them, have come to Canada from many countries and from different times in history.

How much do you know about these customs? See how many of these statements you can correctly answer true or false.

1. Most scholars agree that Christ was born on or about December 25.
(True) (False)

2. The yule log, as a part of Christmas, was handed down from the days of medieval England.
(True) (False)

3. Santa Claus and his reindeer is a story given to us from Lapland, where many people still wear reindeer skins and own reindeer.
(True) (False .....)

4. The practice of giving Christmas cards was started by Gutenberg, the German inventor of the first movable printing press.
(True) (False .....)

5. The use of fir trees with candles was made popular by Martin Luther.
(True) (False .....)

6. Hanging up the stocking "by the chimney with care" is a custom that came to Canada from France.
(True) (False .....)

7. The drama of the nativity, the use of the creche, was not a part of Christmas until about 100 years after the birth of Jesus.
(True) (False .....)

8. Mistletoe was first used in symbolize the stars in the sky on the night that Christ was born.
(True) (False .....)

9. We exchange Christmas presents in remembrance of the gifts the Magi brought to the Infant Jesus.
(True) (False .....)

10. The practice of carolling at Christmas developed in eighteenth-century England, and came to Canada only shortly after Wolfe conquered Quebec.
(True) (False .....)

Now, here are the answers:

1. False. Scholars do not agree that December 25 was the day of Christ's birth. The date falls near the winter solstices when the days become longer and the sun stronger in the northern hemisphere. The pagan Romans celebrated the period widely, and the church, wishing to eliminate the un-Christian rites, decreed the day as being the time to observe the birth of Jesus.

2. True. The yule log was burned in the Scandinavian countries for their pagan gods, Odin and Thor.

3. False. St. Nicholas, otherwise called Santa Claus, is a legend given by Holland. It is said the white-bearded saint rode in from Asia Minor on his white horse, accompanied by his Moorish servant, Peter. He left presents for good children and switches for naughty ones.

4. False. Christmas cards are relatively new. They were first printed in England in 1846 and made popular by Prince Albert, consort of Queen Victoria.

5. True. Trees had been used as decorations, but it was Martin Luther who put on the first trimmings and gave the connection with Christmas.

Weekly Devotion

(By Rev. A. R. Seal)

United Church, Forestburg

"Behold, I send my messenger to prepare the way before me, and the Lord whom you seek will suddenly come to his temple . But who can endure the day of his coming, and who can stand when he appears." Malachi 3:1a, 2.

This text, a strand of the Messianic expectation of Israel was wisely woven by Handel into his "Messiah".

That the coming of God's Chosen One should be unbearable contrasts markedly with the more familiar Messianic notes of comfort, good news, reconciliation and peace. But there was a cross as well as a cradle. Jesus was crucified.

Because of his peerless purity, rigorous requirements, perception of man's pretentions, Jesus caused many to withdraw from him or even hate him enough to want to have him crucified.

Man is not repelled by a God who is the product of his prejudices or the result of wishful thinking. He is repelled by the God who makes himself known in Jesus Christ. Today we try to keep him and his holiness, demands and insights at arms length, by our secularization or sentimentalization of Christmas, by our frantic festive activities, or by our reducing him and his message to the realm of the dubious by various processes of mental gymnastics. He still comes to his own home and his own people receive him not.

But to all who have the courage to receive him, to be judged and inspired by his purity, challenged by his call to discipleship, humbled & made penitent by the exposure of one's inner thoughts and desires to all who believe in his name, take him seriously without reservations to them he gives the power to become children of God who know the reality of the comfort, good news, reconciliation and peace of Christmas.

The Bible Today

The following extract from a letter written recently by Miss K. L. Holmes-Libbis of the Bible Societies in the Congo, reveals something of the situation in that country:

"There seems to be a new spirit and new life in Congo recently, and plans are going ahead in the Protestant missions.

"Although every church is packed to overflowing for every service, it is estimated that at least 80% of the population is unevangelised. What a breathtaking challenge! If only the Scriptures could be produced more quickly! We just can't keep a Lingala Testament or Tshiluba Bible in stock!

"Down in the Kasai I was besieged with people pleading for the Word of God, and in some of the big centres, the people were actually accusing the missionaries of withholding the Scriptures from them. There is such a shortage.

"Unfortunately, the Tshiluba Bible took seven months to reach Congo from the time it left the packers, but it has shown us how desperately these people who have suffered so much want God's Word."

6. False. The Dutch and the Germans began this practice in the United States in accordance with a legend that a saint had once dropped some golden coins down a chimney which were caught in a stocking (some say shoe) that had been left to dry by the fireplace.

7. True. In 1223, St. Francis constructed the nativity scene in his cave above Grecchio. Its beauty has made it a sacred part of Christmas.

8. False. Mistletoe was first used in pagan rites by the druids in pre-Christian England. Mistletoe symbolized purity, was worshipped with sacrifices and when enemies met under it, they embraced in friendship.

9. True and False. We have come to exchange presents in remembrance of the gifts the Wise Men brought the Christ Child, but the original custom came from the pagan Roman's Saturnalia celebration mentioned in answer one. They first exchanged dolls representing their deities, and later gifts of gold.

10. False. Caroling originated in the 13th century, in Germany. Initially, the people sang and danced around a woman and a babe in a cradle, symbolizing Mother Mary and Infant Jesus. It is believed that Jacques Cartier and his men, wintering at their wind-whipped shelter at Stadacona in 1535, were the first to sing Christmas carols in Canada.

THE CHRISTMAS CLOSE

People become a bit frantic as Christmas approaches, and I don't blame them. Every year, despite fervent pledges to keep it simple, the holiday season seems to begin earlier, grow more garish, and finally turn into a three-ring circus before the last stocking is hung.

While we all deplore the expense and exhaustion involved, we are all ardent players of that great North American game known as "Hoodle Your Neighbor."

That's why the simple little candle in the window has evolved into that hideous phantasmagoria of colored lights all over the front of the house.

That's why the few sprigs of evergreen over the mantel have evolved into a living-room resembling a spruce summit.

Regardless of such things as a happy family gathering, the pleasure of the old carols, the joy of giving, Christmas is not really a success unless we can come up with something that will put the neighbors' noses out of joint.

And this is where I come in. I can't bear to see people unhappy. Except my neighbors. After a lot of thought, I've come up with a few pre-Christmas suggestions that will turn your neighbor green with envy, red with rage, in the proper colors for the season.

How about a Yule Log this year? Get that old mattress out of the attic or off the bed in the guest room. Saturate it in gas. Roll it up, tie it with ropes and hide it in the garage.

On Christmas Eve, when your neighbor is gloating through the curtains at the vulgar nativity scene in four colors on his front lawn, take out your Yule log and burn it on your lawn. When he rushes out — and he will — tell him it's the genuine article, ordered from England. Then watch him burn. By the way, don't over-do it. Don't try burning your Yule log in your two-foot-wide fireplace.

A variation on this theme is an eternal flame. If you don't have gas, have a line run in to your front lawn. Tell your neighbor the guys who are tearing up your lawn are looking for a leak in your sewer. This will please him.

Then, some night, half an hour after he turns on his electrical monstrosity, flip your gas switch, and slop out and light your eternal flame. The fiendish ingenuity of your plan, the simple dignity of your little light burning merry, in wind and snow, will drive him wild. It'll be worth the few hundred bucks it costs.

This year, forget all about that junk for your living-room: Christmas candles, spruce boughs, sprigs of holly, tasteful lights in the chandelier. Oh, let your wife go through the motions. Women enjoy such futilities.

But a couple of nights before Christmas, when your wife is on a last mad shopping scramble, throw all that garbage out. Then take two gallons of paint, one red and one green, and paint everything in your livingroom one or the other. Your neighbor will be livid with envy when you ask him over for refreshments. Your wife may be any color.

A variation on this is to let your kids help you paint, and not ask your neighbor over Christmas morning, you send the kids over at seven a.m., in appropriate colors, and they ask him over.

Speaking of refreshments, how about a wassail bowl this year? It's quite simple to make, and bowed to impress. Take any large bowl or small washtub. Half fill with cut-brown ale. It's an old Elizabethan recipe, and don't forget to tell your neighbor this.

Stir in several wassails. Those are small, sunbeat Englishmen, pickled in alcohol. Something like the shepherds in shepherd's pie, but no grizzle. Flavor to taste with nutmeg, nut-brown maidens, mistletoe and garlic salt. Fill bowl with gin. Fly neighbor generously. But don't touch the stuff yourself.

If you haven't got him by now there's no hope for you, and you might as well relax and enjoy Christmas with all the old familiar horrors of last year.

Premier's Christmas Message

(By Honorable E. C. Manning)

I am grateful for this opportunity to once more extend warm and sincere greetings for a very happy Christmas to each and every citizen of Alberta.

On this annual festive occasion we open our hearts and homes to loved ones and friends and the warmth of fellowship and good will produces a glow that lingers long in our memories. At such a time, let us not forget the many whose lot is less fortunate than our own. Let us give a prominent place in our thoughts and our prayers to the hungry and destitute and homeless throughout the earth and especially to those who still spend this Christmas under the yoke of oppression, no matter what form it may take.

We are commemorating the birthday of the One who came that men might have life and have it more abundantly. Let us not be content merely to recognize that this is so but let us apply ourselves to those efforts which by His grace will establish the blessings of a truly Christian civilization for all men everywhere. Only then can we say that we have taken a step towards the literal fulfilment of the Christmas message or genuine peace on earth and goodwill towards men.

Again, sincere best wishes, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, and may this Christmas Day be a Joyous occasion that you will look back on with pleasant memories for many years to come.

Homemakers Recipe For Christmas

All glory be to God on high,
And to the earth be peace;
Goodwill henceforth from heaven to men
Begin, and never cease. Amen

May there be good cheer in your home and gay lights in your windows. May there be a friendly fire in your home and good things cooking in your kitchen throughout the coming holiday season.

Preparation is the key to relaxed unhurried hospitality. Organization ahead of time will eliminate last-minute fluster. Get out a pencil and paper and make out a list of every last thing you plan to do. List the gift shopping, the cards and letters to be sent; the food to be bought and the cooking and baking to be done. With everything down on paper it is easier to decide what can be relegated to other members of the family. (Christmas should be a family affair). Decide what should be done first and spread the balance over the remaining time.

RECIPE FOR MERRY CHRISTMAS

Take the living room of any home and add a family. Mix the wonder of a little girl, the sparkle of a boy's glance and the love of family. Stir well. Set gently before a hearth fire until the spirit of Christmas leavens the mixture.

Now add the scent of cedar, the brightness of holly and the sound of Santa's sleigh bells. Stir in a generous quantity of gaiety. Mix well, then simmer in the warmth of goodwill to mess until it bubbles with laughter. Garnish with gifts tied with your heart strings. Serve by the light of a star to the tune of a Christmas carol.

This recipe is sufficient to serve the whole world.

White Christmas For Alberta

Nothing seems to put the damper on Christmas. Activities were somewhat curtailed, but visiting and travelling was general, even though the weatherman came up with pretty severe weather conditions. Those who had earlier thought there would be an almost black Christmas had such thoughts rudely shattered as Christmas week saw a substantial snowfall, followed by steadily colder weather. Christmas morning dawned with the temperature at 20 plus below and chilling wind, which continued through the weekend.

At the time of reporting the was the mercury was on the rise, and residents are digging in for a cold spell.

Rev. Grymaloski Leaving Killam

KILLAM— On Tuesday, December 21, approximately one hundred members and friends of the Killam Baptist Church met in the church basement for a farewell dinner in honor of Pastor and Mrs. Anton Grymaloski and family who are moving to Grande Prairie to take up pastoral duties in the church there.

Following the banquet, Ralph Sorensen presided at a program of special music interspersed with expressions of appreciation to the Grymaloski for their faithful service to the fellowship enjoyed with them during their pastorate in Killam.

Among those who spoke were Jack Glass, representing the Couples Club, Rev. Annett, speaking on behalf of the Flagstaff Ministerial Association, and Rev. D. Johnson and Rev. H. Mattson representing the Baptist General Conference in Alberta.

Several of the church members expressed their appreciation on behalf of the various departments of the church and also presented each member of the family with a farewell gift.

Pastor and Mrs. Grymaloski have served faithfully in the Killam Baptist Church for five and one-half years. They are loved by the congregation and will be missed when they leave. They believe, however, that God is working out His purpose in their lives and that He will use them in His service in Grande Prairie.

IT ENDS WELL. It's been a good year, but the old good 1965 has come down to the end. The world is one year older, perhaps a little wiser, as it prepares for a new start in 1966.

Hospital Complex Holds Annual Christmas Party

KILLAM— An estimated crowd of close to 200 enjoyed thoroughly the annual Pre-Christmas Party staged at the Hospital Complex and sponsored by the Sisters and Medical staff. The recreation room and lounge were very artistically decorated in Christmas motif, and the boisterous were on hand to greet each visitor as they came in.

Tables were placed about the spacious room to accomodate the many guests at a sumptuous banquet featuring roast turkey with all the trimmings. Served in cafeteria style, the serving tables were loaded with scores of specially prepared dishes and fancy displays of the culinary art. Novelties in the form of paper hats, crackers and fortunes for each one present, caused a gay atmosphere to prevail throughout the banquet.

Following the banquet a program was put on by the various groups who make up the large staff of the hospital. Drs. Kon and Jeanette MacQuarrie were introduced, and Dr. McQuarrie spoke briefly of his eight years at Killam. He expressed his regret at leaving for Camrose where he will be on the medical staff of the Clinic He in turn introduced Dr and Mrs. D G. Patel, M.B., D.G.O., M.R.C.O.G., who will be taking over the practice at Killam.

A group of Christmas songs by the staff of the Auxiliary Hospital got the program under way, and provided the happy atmosphere which prevailed throughout. The laymen were treated to the experience of witnessing a major operation as a group of would-be surgeons (male attendents) performed a difficult and technical gall bladder operation with tongs, tin snips and hammer. The crowd showed approval as the patient was pronounced well and on the road to reasonable recovery. Interspersed throughout the program was carol singing with all taking part.

Added attractions were put on by the Housekeeping staff with a comedy skit entitled Topsy Turvey, and the General Staff portrayed the Highway-man with script being read as the actors silently carried out the theme of a damsel giving her life for the man she loved. The Morken sisters there sang a trio to represent the office staff and nurse Peggy Orr, gave a bit of the rumors going about the hospital, chief among which was the departure of Drs MacQuarrie The program was closed with a vocal duet by Mrs. Blumhagen and Mrs. Demkiw.

The room was cleared of tables and dancing held away for the balance of the evening.

Now What About 1966?

Every time an old year draws to a close and the dawn of a new one approaches, financiers, economists and business people endeavor to calculate what the next twelve months holds in store economically. Some prognosticators are experts in this field, and base their theories on careful attention to what has been happening nationally and internationally. One of the widely accepted authorities on such matters is the Bank of Montreal, which has a group whose job it is to watch such matters. This group, while acknowledging that there will be a slight let-down in economic expansion, indicates a continued buoyancy in 1966. Continued expansion seems indicated although at a somewhat slower rate than in 1965, but weighing all the factors involved insofar as they can be assessed, the balance seems to be on the side of optimism. It seems fairly clear that one of the principle sources of strength, capital investment, will continue to be a major expansionary influence in the months ahead. Government incentives for winter building, which were so successful last year, are being repeated this winter and should help to maintain residential construction. The prospects for maintaining a high level of exports are also good, even though wheat shipments may be lower than in 1965. While higher spending on non-durable goods at home is assured, along with services, due to increased population, the prospects for durable goods seems less certain.

While nobody can predict activities for the months ahead, indications are that 1966 will be a good year for Canada.

New Year's Resolutions?

It's almost time to again delude ourselves with New Year's Resolutions. It would be interesting to know just how many people actually keep their New Year resolutions, or even make resolutions. Most of us try to keep them trivial so that the onus of keeping them is light. So trivial in fact that we didn't really intend to keep them anyway. We can't even fool ourselves. But the grand life. We're always trying to fool ourselves. We're going to quit smoking; we're going to quit drinking; stop burning the candle at both ends; we're especially going to quit over-eating (right after the New Year feast). Perhaps before we go too far this time, we better sit back and think. We have no great desire to use our brains. School kids want to be spoon fed instead of thinking for themselves. Workers want to do only what is expected of them, and little if anything more. Taking these two examples we could multiply them and paint a pretty black picture. But we must not do this, for everyone has the ability to think. Perhaps this would be the best of resolutions for the New Year, "I resolve to think for myself during 1966". Everyone is a potential revolutionary in that given the incentive and the desire, could change the world for the better. A lot of little good deeds done frequently by a lot of people could make life more worthwhile.

Who Speaks For English Speaking Canadians!

"We Have Become Strangers in Our Land"
(Orillia Packet and Times)

There are fourteen millions or more of us, and we have built a nation in the vast country which is the envy of the world but we have become strangers in our own land. For although we have always thought of ourselves as Canadians, our mother tongue is English. And in the Canada of today, who speaks for us?

We who have always prided ourselves on our individual freedoms and who founded our institutions on the principle of justice for all, are today branded as oppressors of our Quebec brothers and monsters of cultural injustice.

Every pundit and commentator taken up the cry and heaps scorn and abuse upon the tyrants that we are, but who speaks for us?

We who by hard work and enterprise have built a Canadian economy that is a marvel of its kind are reproached, by those who will not share the comfortable confines of their own province, of failing to share the wealth of this vast country with them in Quebec, and our governments consider ways of punishing us for our economic temerity. Who speaks for us?

We had thought that we had defended our nation bravely in four wars, but those who would not enlist with us now brand us as war-mongering imperialists and our services as worse than waste.

Our every institution is ridiculed as a reactionary trapping from a colonial past, and foremost in the ranks of our bailers is the CBC which we ourselves created and subsidized. Who speaks for us?

Our flag, our national anthem, the crown, all the tag symbols, once a treasured part of our national heritage are taken from us and destroyed as symbols of a past so... glorified it, but now suddenly become shameful.

All the links of brotherhood with the world-wide Commonwealth, venerated from our earliest days in home and schoolroom, are disgraced and spat upon in the strange new land in which we find ourselves, for who speaks for us?

In a world where English has become a universal language, we find ourselves learning French, yet no one insists that our Quebec neighbors might profitably adopt compulsory English in their schools.

Our national airline is given a French name and its hostesses, serving a million English-speaking Americans, are fluent only in French.

Our railroad is Gallicized, our radio stations spout French to a mystified audience, and our politicians demand that we consider Quebec not as a province but as a state, equal to all our other provinces lumped together, and prate of a separate Canada for Quebec. For Quebec has identity, vitality, culture; we, the pundits assure us, have done. Les Quebecois, lis pont ils French.

Our history is sneered at, our statues defaced, our Queen insulted, but we must understand these things as symptoms of Quebec aspirations, we are told.

Our leather-jacketed hoodlums are jailed as delinquents, but in Quebec they are interviewed and their brutalities widely publicized as socially significant.

Corrupt politicians exist only in our world, in Quebec, one comprehends, patronage is a way of life and is no concern to us.

For this is Canada, the racial partnership where the partner who contributed least to the defence, the wealth, the vitality of the country must be permitted to take the most out of it in cash allowances, privileges and prerogatives.

This is the new Canada, and in the inner councils of its government, in its press, its broadcast media, public and private, in all its vast expanse, who speaks for us?—Orilla Packet and Times.

THE HARDY HUMAN RACE

It has been predicted that the human race will end in self-destruction. We do not think so.

Genus Homo is a very adaptable creature. In the dim and misty past, when fierce, huge animals existed in substantial number, puny mankind survived. It was the mammoths, the dinosauri and the sabre-toothed tigers and other animals of that description that disappeared.

The birds took to the air, the fish to the sea and the wild beasts to the jungles, the mountains and the polar regions. The human species came out into the open and conquered all.

The development of the human brain was the greatest achievement; that and the juxtaposition of the thumb and the first finger on the hand.

Mankind has survived the attacks of wild beasts, inter-tribal wars, various forms of disease epidemics, and climatical changes including the ice age movement. No, we do not think that the human race will be exterminated . . . unless the end comes to Mother Earth.—Brooks Bulletin

★ MACDUFF REPORT

The "Comer"

OTTAWA— The tax structure committee laying the ground work for the negotiation next year of new tax-sharing agreements between Ottawa and the provinces met recently and received a report on trends that may be expected during 1967-1972.

The Ministers recognized, after studying the projections, "that priorities will have to be carefully considered by all governments in respect of expenditures on major programs that will compete for available funds".

It was clear to the Ministers, Federal and Provincial, that expanded expenditures would far outstrip estimated revenues in the five years ahead. This means there will be little chance for tax cuts. The Ministers recognized the need for harmonizing Federal and Provincial fiscal and economic policies. By this stern economic facts of life the Federal and Provincial Governments will have to establish a system of priorities in their spending programs.

The projections provided a starting point for the new tax-sharing arrangements that will have to be worked out between the Federal and Provincial Governments next year when the existing tax agreements expire.

At the Federal-Provincial conferences next year crucial decisions which could affect Confederation will be taken concerning the division of the country's tax resources.

The only provincial treasurer at the talks, he issue a formal statement after the conference was Premier Lesage who repeated Quebec's objection to participation in shared-cost and conditional federal payments to the provinces, and Quebec's desire to opt out of such programs. He argued that it was Quebec's belief that this type of program 'jeopardizes the fiscal autonomy of the provinces."

The Ministers met for two days with Acting Finance Minister Sharp and Privy Council President Guy Favreau who has special responsibilities in the field of Federal-Provincial relations, assigned to him by the Prime Minister.

This meeting to survey the economic situation in Canada in advance of budget making by the Finance Ministers was the second of its kind. Former Finance Minister Walter Gordon attended the first last year. The acting Minister, Mr. Sharp, decided to go ahead with the practice as a good idea.

The acting Finance Minister handled himself well at the press conference after the meeting, and the provincial ministers had nothing but praise for the manner in which he had performed at the meetings behind closed doors it was obious that Prime Minister L. B. Pearson would not be naming him to the post of Finance Minister.

Mr Sharp from the time he entered the cabinet has been marked as a "comer" by all those observing the political scene on Parliament Hill. He has conducted himself well in Parliament and outside of the Commons. He has handled "hot potato" questions with a sureness and confidence that earned him the envy of his colleagues and the respect of the opposition.

There is no doubt that when the time comes that Mr. Pearson makes known his readiness to step down from leadership, Mr. Sharp will be front and centre in the leadership race. However running strongly against him will undoubtedly be External Affairs Minister Paul Martin and the new Trade Minister, Robert Winters.

Mr. Martin has experience and popularity. He is known from coast to coast. Polls ringing out the most popular ministers in Pearson's cabinet place the External Affairs Minister at the head of the list with Jean Lallarch running close behind him.

Mr. Winters is reported in some Liberal circles to have already embarked on a calculated campaign to re-establish himself as a leading force within the Liberal party. He is travelling, meeting Liberals, speaking to Liberal organizations and generally making himself known again as an active Liberal politician. In fact so strong has become the campaign in some quarters across the country, promoting Mr. Winters as the next most logical leader of the Liberal party, that it may have a reaction. Some Liberal M.P.'s are cautioning their local organizations not to jump on any would-be leader's bandwagon at this early date.

Once Parliament meets January 18 Mr. Winters will have the opportunity of demonstrating once again what he can do in the House of Commons. He was a very able Minister under the leadership of Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent. He was a protege of the late Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe and established a reputation as a very capable Cabinet Minister. Before he was defeated in the 1957 election.

Meantime Prime Minister Pearson is national leader of the Liberal party and presumably will carry on in that position for many months to come. However during the campaign that ended without his succeeding in winning a good working majority, Mr. Pearson privately informed newsmen that if he won he would probably only stay on as leader for two and a half to three years. Now that he is once again leading a minority government it is understood he is not anxious to carry on that long and could shorten his stay down to two years or less. There is no doubt that in Ottawa there is a growing feeling among Liberals that the time is approaching when they will have to choose sides and pick their man in the great race for that coveted prize —the national leadership of the party.

1965 Number Alberta Unemployed Workers Is Lowest In Ten Years

(Honourable Ray Reierson)
Minister of Labour — Telephones

As 1965 draws to a close employers and working people alike can look back upon a year which has shaped up as a most exciting one in the history of the Province, and I believe they may look forward to 1966 with confidence and anticipation. In the field of Labour-Management Relations solid gains were made in a very large number of labour agreements re-negotiated, and we maintained our traditional record of labor peace. There was only one strike during the year.

The unusually large construction program produced severe shortages of skilled tradesmen and pointed out more than ever before the importance of our trades, technical and vocational training programs, and the importance stepped-up training in these fields will take in the years ahead. Our early recognition of this need resulted in the installation of the fine Tech Schools and many Vocational High Schools now most important assets.

Figures of unemployment were the lowest percentage-wise for the last ten years, and as of the 1st of December, with a labor force of over 541,000, less than 13,000 or 2.3% are listed as applicants for employment. This number is approximately one half of the figure of five years ago when our working force was smaller by 60,000 than it is today.

Diversification of employment opportunity continues to increase, as industrialization in petro-chemical and manufacturing processes expand to record levels. Our progress has placed new pressures upon Alberta Government Telephones for services and improvements, giving a record year of development in this department as well.

During 1965, Alberta Government Telephones completed the largest construction program in its history.

The microwave by-pass route from Milk River through Vegreville to Peace River was completed at a cost of $1.4 million.

At the same time, Fort Murra was provided with additional telephone service via microwave.

The Red Deer — Rocky Mountain House cable expansion has been installed to provide first class service in the west central portion of the province. This installation, first of its type in Alberta, was completed at a cost of $265,000 and will be turned up in April, 1966. Under construction, and scheduled for completion during early 1966, is a cable extension from Edmonton to Drumheller.

Major building projects included the construction of Work Centers at Red Deer and Lethbridge and the yard completion of the new Work Center at Grande Prairie. Under construction at the present time are Work Centres at Medicine Hat and Rocky Mountain House.

A total of 16 portable Community Dial Office and 14 permanent buildings were completed in line with the rural dial conversion program.

Thirty-eight Alberta communities converted to dial service during 1965. In 1966 forty-two offices will be added to the one hundred and seventy-eight already providing this service in the new program.

To serve the rural communities, 4,002 miles of underground cable was installed, at a cost of approximately five million dollars. An additional 433 miles of pole line was constructed to service the unserved rural areas.

During the coming year it is expected the new office at Peace River will be completed and Direct Distance Dialling will be extended to that area and to the City of Edmonton. In addition, the four storey addition to the Calgary 7th Avenue Building will be completed, at a cost of 800 thousand dollars. A major project under consideration for 1966 is the start of construction for a new Head Office building at Edmonton.

Announced during November was the new rural plan for integration of Mutual Telephone Companies with Alberta Government Telephones. Under the plan, ownership of the Mutuals will be taken on by AGT, in accordance with recent suggestions by farm and municipal unions and associations.

Administratively, during 1965 AGT initiated an extensive training program for management and technical employees, designed to further increase the administrative efficiency of the organization.

As old records fall, and new objectives are reached, let me wish every Albertan a full measure of success and satisfaction in sharing in the work, the responsibilities and the benefits of building Alberta.

Judy Kishlewich Wed At St. Andrew's Church

St. Andrew's Anglican Church was the scene of a pretty winter wedding on November 20, at 3:00 p.m., when Judy Ann, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Kishlewich of Dayslend was united in marriage and Herbert Adolph Schutt, youngest son of Mrs. and the late Dr Hermann Schutt of Ludwigslust, Germany. Reverend A. Greenwood officiated at the double-ring ceremony.

The bride, entering the church on the arm of her father, looked lovely in a floor-length gown of white bridal satin, featuring a fitted bodice with big-point sleeves, and two panels. Her shoulder-length veil was held in place with a chiffon rose, and she carried a bouquet of red cascade roses.

She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Anne Semeshuk, matron of honor, and close friend, Rose Marie Kostler, as bridesmaid. They were identical floor-length peacock blue satin gowns designed on empire lines, with fitted matching lace jackets. They carried white cascade mums tinted with blue, and wore matching shoes and white gloves.

The groom was attended by his nephew, Helmut Febich, as best man, and his close friend, Norman Bush, as groomsman. Ushers were Ron Kishlewich, brother of the bride. Albert Semeshuk, nephew, and Richard Wasney, cousin of the bride.

During the signing of the register, Professor Oliver Bowen, originally of Jamaica, sang "O Perfect Love."

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs Kishlewich wore a one-piece satin and lace dusty rose dress with blue accessories, and white and blue mums on corsage. Mrs. B. Pilsick, sister of the groom, chose a red velvet dress with black accessories, and a corsage of light red and white mums

Following the ceremony a reception was held in the Elks Hall for approximately 150 guests. The bride's table was centred with a three-tiered cake, baked by the bride's mother. Master of ceremonies was Toni Rowan, and Nick Semeluk proposed a toast to the bride, to which the groom ably responded. The guest book was taken care of by Sharon Semeluk, niece of the bride.

For going away the bride chose a cranberry red one-piece double-knit ensemble with black accessories, and white orchids on corsage.

Following a honeymoon at Banff, the couple are residing in Edmonton

F. MAYNES MARRIED 50 YEARS

SEDGEWICK— Open house was held in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mayne's Golden Wedding Anniversary, at the Legion Hall recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Mayne are pioneer residents of the Sedgewick district, having arrived here in 1913

They were united in marriage on the 6th day of December in 1915 in Killam, with the Rev. Stewart officiating. Their attendants were Lily Bjaal and Robert Mayne

The anniversary celebration was planned by their two sons and daughters, and was attended by some 150 relatives and friends. Mrs. Rene Gaume was in charge of the guest book. A buffet luncheon was served, after which a 3-tiered wedding cake, gift of the grandchildren was cut and served. Coffee and tea was poured by Miss Vera Grieve and Mrs. Margaret Pedersen. The table was decorated with flowers from the great grandchildren and the Sedgwick Branch of the Canadian Legion.

The family presented their parents with a carpet.

During the evening Mrs. Howard Smith sang a lovely solo, and Mr. Howard Smith presented the couple with a purse of money from friends of Sedgwick and district. Many other gifts were received during the evening, to all of which the honored couple humorously replied.

Mr. and Mrs. Mayne farmed North of Sedgewick until moving into town in 1946. They have two sons, Everette and Frank Jr., both of Sedgwick; Ruby (Mrs. Hunt) of Killam and Pearl (Mrs. Rene Gaume) of Hardisty; ten grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

The enjoyable evening was closed with everyone joining in singing "My Best To You".

Home Lighting

Adequate home lighting is essential for beauty and utility. It brightens rooms and makes them look larger . . . highlights furnishings and brings out colours . . . provides decorative accents and creates a pleasing atmosphere. It also adds to your comfort, safety and convenience. You will need to plan for two types of lighting — general illumination to see and carry about and local lighting for specific activities such as reading, meal preparation, grooming, hobbies.

Good quality lighting provides adequate illumination without glare, harsh shadows or excessive contrasts. You can achieve quality lighting through the proper selection and placement of portable lamps and installed fixtures.

Before you buy lighting equipment consider:

— style. Portable "plug-in" lamps include floor lamps, pole lamps, boudoir lamps and pin-ups in different sizes, shapes and colours. Lighting fixtures mounted on the ceiling or wall include standard kitchen and bathroom fixtures . . . entry and hallway fixtures . . . chandeliers . . . pull-down . . . valance and cornice fixtures.

Lamps and fixtures come in fluorescent or incandescent types . . . provide direct or indirect light . . . are available in pairs or singles, matched or co-ordinated. They provide varying degrees of illumination. Look for lamps and fixtures to fit your decorating plan and to provide the type and amount of lighting you need.

— flexibility. Lamps and fixtures may offer flexibility features for adjusting the placement, direction or amount of illumination. These include pull-down styles . . . swing arm mechanisms . . . swivel joints . . . 3-way bulbs . . . dimmer controls. Look for flexibility to provide the light control you want.

— placement. Lighting equipment should be placed to give upward and downward light . . . general illumination . . . local lighting for visual tasks. Portable lamps should be placed so that there is no glare from either above or below the shade when seated.

— diffusers and shields. Diffusers on lamps and lighting shields on fixtures reduce glare and soften light. They should be large enough to cover bulbs and made of material that diffuses light. Eye saving bulbs are available with built-in diffusers.

— construction. Lamps and fixtures must be well-constructed to provide adequate lighting, attractive appearance and proper safety.

Look for lamps with sturdy, well-weighted bases . . . centre of adequate length . . . concealed wiring . . . conveniently placed switches . . . adequate diffusers.

Look for fixtures with well-fitted parts . . . adequate light shielding . . . a sufficient number of sockets to spread light. Be sure that fixtures are installed by a qualified electrician. Check installation costs as well as the price of the fixture.

— lamp bases. Materials for lamp bases include wood, metal, pottery, glass, plastic, leather, plaster, stone, porcelain, enamel. Shapes include urns, bowls, columns, candlesticks, candelabras. Bases come in a variety of colours, textures and patterns. Choose according to your decorating plan.

— lamp shades. Materials for lamp shades include fabrics, plastics, glass or gas cloth, paper parchment, glass, metal. Materials may be translucent or opaque.

Translucent shades reflect light through the shade as well as up and down. The amount of shield by these sounds to conceal the bulb position and the outline of the frame and to produce soft diffused light.

Opaque shades reflect light up and down but not through the shade. Material should be lined in white or a pale colour to reflect light.

Shapes include ball, cone, rectangle, drum or shallow drum. Drum shades throw light up and down . . . cone shades direct light to specific areas.

FROM PRAIRIE TO PARKLAND

Tree growth is gradually spreading over the whole parkland region, the big good stands of bunch grass that once covered most of the area. This means a reduction in range land for the rancher.

The trees were not always there, says Alex Johnston of the Lethbridge Research Station. Many of them have just grown in since the prairie fires have ceased to ravage the prairies. Early explorers of the west, he says, reported good stands of rough fescue where stands of trees have now reduced the grazing value to almost nil. Most of these trees are only 50 to 60 years old. Soils specialists have found that the underlying soil is a prairie soil, almost free from the presence of trees. Mr. Johnston speculates that in many cases willows first appeared and provided the shade required by the young poplars which were later replaced by spruces.

The significance to ranchers, Mr. Johnston says, is that where poplar occurs on a deep, moist soil, the undergrowth will contain large amounts of larkspur. This is a poisonous, shade loving plant and the only practical control is to remove the trees. It will persist only a short time in bright sunlight.

Forage yield is also reduced because of crowding. Palatable forages can't grow under these conditions and yields drop, although the reduction is gradual until the trees are about 25 years old, Says Mr. Johnston.

In tree stands 15 to 20 years of age there may be sufficient plants to regrass cleared land when the poplar is removed. In stands older than this, the recovery would be very slow because of insufficient seed.

It is much better past to clear the trees, prepare a good seed-bed and cultivated forages, Mr. Johnston says. Generally speaking grass legume mixtures are higher yielding, and clearing and seeding brings the land back into grass production much more quickly than clearing and waiting for the native grass to grow back.

Weekly Devotion

There must be barely a person who is not influenced in some way by the spirit of Christmas. The exchange of gifts and cards quite frientlines, the bright lights and decorated trees, cheerfulness and goodwill. Everyone at least tries to have a good time, even if some, like Dickens's "Scrooge", can't quite manage it.

But why rejoice, why cheese this time? Some are singing the old stories about a child born in a manger in Judea nearly two thousand years ago but surely this single event cannot have much connection with what we are doing today; and for millions it quite clearly has none.

The Gospel appointed to be read on Christmas Day in the churches of the Anglican communio is that of John, beginning with the famous words, "In the beginning was the word", and later on he continues "and the word was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth". For "word", Saint John uses the Greek, "logos" which to the ancients combined the concepts of inward thought and outward expression of this in speech, together with the reasoning principle which lay behind all creation.

So now God had revealed himself, not just as a mere human being, but as the reason for man's very existence. Like has a purpose after all, for it is linked to God's great act in breaking through into His own world "that he might save the people from their sins".

Those who previously saw no purpose in their lives can surely find one at this time of Christmas.

The Kings from the East followed the star as it led them over desert and and dunes. Perhaps they sometimes wondered where they were going as they followed its beckoning light. But they followed till it "stood over the place where the young child lay" and having followed they worshiped. They had found God and His greatest gift. We can find Him too, if we follow and open our hearts.—Rev. Anthony Rast, Anglican Church, Sedgewick.

Weekly Devotion

There must be barely a person who is not influenced in some way by the spirit of Christmas. The exchange of gifts and cards quite frientlines, the bright lights and decorated trees, cheerfulness and goodwill. Everyone at least tries to have a good time, even if some, like Dickens's "Scrooge", can't quite manage it.

But why rejoice, why cheese this time? Some are singing the old stories about a child born in a manger in Judea nearly two thousand years ago but surely this single event cannot have much connection with what we are doing today; and for millions it quite clearly has none.

The Gospel appointed to be read on Christmas Day in the churches of the Anglican communio is that of John, beginning with the famous words, "In the beginning was the word", and later on he continues "and the word was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth". For "word", Saint John uses the Greek, "logos" which to the ancients combined the concepts of inward thought and outward expression of this in speech, together with the reasoning principle which lay behind all creation.

So now God had revealed himself, not just as a mere human being, but as the reason for man's very existence. Like has a purpose after all, for it is linked to God's great act in breaking through into His own world "that he might save the people from their sins".

Those who previously saw no purpose in their lives can surely find one at this time of Christmas.

The Kings from the East followed the star as it led them over desert and and dunes. Perhaps they sometimes wondered where they were going as they followed its beckoning light. SUGAR AND SPICE
by Bill Smiley

BENEATH THE TINSEL

Are you one of those birds who goes around in a perpetual grump at this time of year? Whether we like it or not, the celebration of Christmas has changed drastically in the last generation or so.

Many people resent this and regret it. They feel that commercialism has taken over the festive season, that the true meaning of Christmas has been smothered in a swirl of electronics and gimmickry, of advertising and noise and vulgarity and pure greed. I don't agree.

Admittedly, Christmas is no longer a simple observance of the birth of Christ. In a complex and neurotic age, it has become complex and neurotic. Physically, the holiday is exhausting, and financially it is [illegible]

But it's a little too glib, and certainly tedious, to suggest that the spirit of Christmas has been lost.

Certainly, Santa Claus and Rudolph are plastic figures. Certainly, some of the "Christmas" songs are nauseating. Certainly, many Christians are utter glutions at this season. Certainly, many on the decorations and cards and gifts is the [illegible]

But these are only material things, the outer trappings of the great festival. Beneath these gaudy robes, the bones of Christmas—the grand old carols, the simple, enthralling story — are as strong as ever. And the great heart of Christmas—the real desire for peace and goodwill — beats as warmly as ever.

Brownies and Cubs go caroling to homes for the aged. Service clubs and church groups and women's organizations bustle around with boxes of cheer for the sick and the poor. Firemen and legionnaires repair toys and wrap gifts for underprivileged children.

Almost everyone, however temporary it may be, begins to glow with a genuine desire to give, in love, to be one of a great human fellowship. No, don't tell me the true spirit of Christmas is disappearing.

Come, now, all you Scrooges. Admit it. You enjoy giving at Christmas, even though you grumble a bit, and even though you have to do without things yourself. Until next June.

And one of the great things about Christmas, the real Christmas, is that the gifts that really count don't have to be wrapped, and don't cost a cent.

What finer gift can we give our children than the teaching of the lovely carols, the telling of the thrilling story? And what greater gift can they give us than the look of wonder and delight in their eyes?

Think of all the other inconspicuous gifts for which no charge account or credit card is involved:

An invitation to Aunt Martha to spend Christmas Day with you, even though she's 85, deaf as a stone, belches like a lobsterat, and always carries a crock in her purse.

A warm smile for your husband on Christmas morning, and the heart-felt statement that you always HAVE liked Christmas trees leaning at a 45-degree angle.

A warm smile for your wife on Christmas morning, and the fervent remark that she's never looked lovelier, even though she resembles a camp-follower in the Crimean [illegible]

A simple announcement from your wife on Christmas morning, in the twentieth year of your marriage, when your kids are in high school or college, "Guess what, dear. We're going to have a baby."

A sincere, sympathetic phone call to your neighbor on Christmas morning, when you discover that his front-lawn display, featuring Santa Claus and the Seven Dwarfs, has blown down in the night. Interspersed, of course, with a few jolly "Ha! Ha! He's!", in the spirit of the season.

These are the gifts that give real joy, whether you're giving or receiving, if you have the true spirit of Christmas. Now wait a minute. I'm not back to the starry eyed [illegible] your wife's mink stole or your kids' toys. Just in case . . . .

ALBERTA JUNIOR CITIZEN OF THE YEAR
BULLETIN:
THORSBY BOY HONORED FOR SAVING COUSIN

It was November 21, 1964 when a near-fatal incident occurred near the home of thirteen-year old Tim Akenhus. His sister Linda and cousin Pat Wickstrom were skating. In his eagerness, Pat skated out too far. Suddenly, the ice cracked and Pat fell into the icy water of Pigeon Lake.

He could not climb out. Linda skated furiously for her home to bring help, but her father's repeated efforts to reach Pat were prevented because the ice kept cracking.

Then young Tim came into view. Quickly sizing up the situation, he crawled out to the exhausted Pat and caught him by the hand.

He inched even closer, grasped the collar of Pat's jacket, and slowly pulled him onto solid ice. Then Mr. Akenhus took over with towels, blankets and hot water.

We congratulate Tim. Our thanks to Alberta's Weekly Newspaper Editors for their active co-operation in the Alberta Junior Citizen of the Year program, sponsored by Alberta's investor-owned electric utility companies.

This is one of a series of Junior Citizen Award announcements. Our special thanks to Howard Bowes, Editor of the Leduc Representative and to Tim's nominator, William Grosiuk of Thorsby.

MemOry Lane

(By Mrs. F. M. Cantlon, Hardisty, Alberta)

After we become older—we return the years of our "Hay-Seed" and we reminisce on days gone by. THIS is as natural as for the young to look forward to days and years to come.

At Christmas time—more that at any other time we are inclined to let our minds drift back to those unforgettable years-years. Some of us can remember right back to when we were very young—possibly the Christmas our first concert when we believed in Santa Claus—when we tried so hard "To be good so Santa would come to our house".

Then came the time when we were not reably sure—followed in regard to the existence of this jolly "Old Saint Nick". THEN, we acquired a sort of superior air around the house in front of our younger brothers and sisters—feeling very versed with some of the "Secret" preparations for the younger ones.

Then came the adolescent ages—ages—when it began to feel "Smart-alec-y"—when we actually sneered at the suggestion of US being in a Christmas concert declaring that sort of thing was strictly for the kids. We knew that it was n't so very long ago that we ourselves ENJOYED being in them ourselves.

Time rolls along—next thing we know we are dating—hoping company with whom—to us at that time is "Simply Lovely". As the years rolls on we are in homes of our own now—with our little ones around our knees—their eyes bright as they listen so intently to that wonderful, age-less story of the "Babe in The Manger. Oh, how it thrills our very being even yet when we re-call those times of "Togetherness" When our little ones loved to hear about how this same Babe—when He grew to Man-hood blessed the children — taking them upon His knee and—placing His Hand on their head, said "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not—for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

So the years roll on again—years of penury and years of plenty—but through them all—the first concert—the same expectancy — that same eagerness—and, most of all they was that same heart-warming atmosphere of LOVE in the home—in the good years AND in the bare.

As our children started to school —there were the Christmas concerts which were held every Christmas time in the little one-room school house situated out on the prairie and which we considder I THE high-light of the year. No one—BUT NO ONE would miss these concerts. The entire district people had worked so hard and so long to make the entertainment the "BEST EVER"—and, to us—the parents—each year we declared that one was surely just that—the best.

The picture changes as the years roll along all to quickly. In the mean time we have built on the old home—the last of our children having "flown the nest" for greener fields—or maybe to make homes of their own.

However, we are STILL able to gather around the home—coming—some, if not all of them returning to celebrate—Christmas or Birthdays—or possibly just for a long week-end holiday.

So—suddenly we shake off the lethergy that has held us in it's grip for days and weeks and we rush around baking their favorite titbits—making up an extra bed or two—maybe even preparing fowl for this very important occasion. With inner excitement we look forward to again hearing the ring of laughter and noise as the grandchildren more or less take over—goeddening our hearts for the time being, at least.

However, after the last of them have left and the old house is quiet again—after we settle down again to the daily hum-drum of lonely existence—isn't it nice to just relax and sit quietly in the old rocking chair—the only sound being maybe the wind as it blows through the bare branches of the old maples and poplar trees close to the house —or maybe the ticking of the mantle clock on the "Side-board"—And dream of the years when we were young—when the family were all young and so dependant on us for everything

First thing we know—January is with us with it's cold stormy days and mostly bright snappy nights When we were younger—even January was all too short in which to do all the things we wished. But when we were "In our prime"—say, thirty-five to fifty—we would often remark, "January seems to be the longest month in the whole year"

Possibly this could be attributed to the sudden laxity-the abrupt cessation of the rush of Christmas—leaving a sort of vacuum that causes us to think January is the longest [illegible]

But to us who have lived to be a ripe old age—who have lived what January [illegible] unless as well as through the Januarys that slipped along all too quickly—we treasure every one of those thirty-one days —yes—hoarding them—as it were —like precious jewels, calling back those memories which we treasure so highly.

Each morning is a new day—unsoiled by yesterdays conflicts or actions —a clean, un-spotted page on which we may record not only our actions —but our very thoughts. And best of all—our memories of days and years gone by.

So, as Christmas of 1965 rolls out onto oblivion—may we continue to enjoy the present — and, as the shades of evening decends, may we look forward to each God-given day as a special gift from the "Giver of all Gifts, with whom there is no variableness—neither shadow of turning"—and thank Him who has seen fit to spare our lives for yet another day.

Baptist Church

KILLAM— Sunday marked the closing of Rev. and Mrs. Grymaloski's ministry here. Although the weather was very cold, many visitors were in attendence. The Pastor chose as his concluding topics "Finally, Brethren, Farewell" and "The Lord is My Shepherd". The Sunday evening service, which was taped for recording, consisted mostly of musical selections and poems by members and friends of the church, with a brief message from the Pastor. Mrs. Grymaloski left a word of challenge after which they sang a duet entitled "When You Pray For Me."

I wnat the New Year's opening days To fill with love, and prayer, and praise:

Some little things to do for Thee, For Thou hast done great things for me.

In Jesus' Name our prayer we raise,

Whose guiding Hand has blessed our days,

And may we, Lord, in godly fear Serve Thee, throughout this coming year! —Anon.

The value of goods imported into Canda last year was $7.5 billion, compared to $5.5 billion in 1960.

Visitors Win At New Year's Tournaments

The two local New Year Day hockey tournaments staged at Killam and Hardisty were put on as usual, with the crowds for the day estimated at from 1500 to 1600 at both arenas. This is proof positive that sport fans like their hockey even at 30 below weather.

At Killam some good hockey was witnessed as four teams from through three games for the top booty of the day. The first game saw Killam Indians win convincingly from Forestburg to the tune of 7-3. A good crowd was on hand to cheer the home team to victory. The game was late in starting and caused a short delay in getting the second game underway.

Dayland, bolstered by players from another league, put on a fine exhibition of team play to win a lopsided victory over the Viking entry to the score of 8 to 3. Only a token crowd stayed around for this contest, preferring to get home for the turkey dinner.

At 8:30 the two winners took the ice for the final game, with Dayland again proving too powerful for the home-town Indians. Puck control and team work gave Dayland a 9 to 5 victory and top money for the day.

Good crowds witnessed some fine hockey at Hardisty where the tourney there saw four teams again fighting it out for first place.

The home Stampeders took out the team from the south, made up of players from Bellshill and area, by a convincing score, in the first game of the day.

The Edmonton Red Wings met Wainwright in the second game, and proved their superiority with a 23 to 3 score. A well-coached team, the Red Wings left no doubt that they came down to win.

The arena was filled for the final game at night, and the crowd was not disappointed in the brand of hockey displayed. The Red Wings again proved superior, punching in five goals, while backing up their goalie with a shut-out. Pixtel score Red Wings 3, Hardisty 0.

The winner of the calf in the draw at Killam was, Pte. First Class Walter Dzikowski of North Carolina. The Indian Club hasn't figured out as yet how to get this animal to North Carolina. How about a barbecue?

S.R.H.L. ACTION— Regular league games in the Battle River League got off to a good start just before Christmas but the cold weather is now forcing cancellation of some games. Monday evening two games were called off with only Irma and Wainwright playing with Irma winning 7 to 3. In the above picture the Viking Gas Kings are shown trying to clear the puck and stop a scoring attempt by the Killam Indians. Indians won in this their first home game of the schedule.

Hot Fire At Killam On A Cold New Year's Day

KILLAM—Fire broke out in the Harry Spiller home at Killam at about 3:00 p.m. on New Year's Day. The Spiller family was away from home at the time, and the smoke from the blaze was noticed by a passer-by who turned in the alarm. The fire brigade was soon on the scene and the fire was held to the interior of the house.

Ballboard in use started to a coal and wood ashes in kitchen stove, the fire soon spread to a nearby wall. This combined with smoke and water damage, left the inside of the large house almost a total loss. Only the quick turning in of the alarm and the hasty response of the fire-fighting equipment saved the entire dwelling from being lost.

Snow! You Haven't Seen Anything Yet

Sure it's cold. In fact it's been pretty bitter for the past week or ten days. But, not as cold as it has been at times in the past. We're conditioned for such things and have learned to take it in stride. Those who have failed to learn this lesson find cold weather quite unnerving.

We also have a fair amount of snow and those who diligently ply the snow shovels can attest to the fact. But again, the snow is not nearly as bad as it has been in the past. If you are hard to convince in this regard just listen to this, from the World Book Encyclopedia:

As you gaze glumly at the falling snow and breed about gaskages, snow shovels and aching backs, remember it could be worse. Much worse. Back in 1921, 76 inches of snow fell at Silver Lake, Colorado in 24 hours, and at Tahoe, California 108 inches of snow came down between January 12 and 15 in the year 1952. The record snowfall for a calendar month was at Tamarack, California which got 390 inches during January of 1911. All these figures are records and therefore unusual, but snow falls of 30 inches are not unusual. Near Lake Erie in Ontario the average snowfall is 150 inches per winter, and in 1958 on the southeast shore there was 27 inch snowfall on Thanksgiving Day. Be glad you didn't live there.

But like it or not, snow is going to be with us for a while and in some quantity. It's not all bad you know. There are people who like snow. Children, skiers, and the people who make overshoes and snow shovels.

Dr. Patel Assumes Practice At Killam

KILLAM—On January 1st, Dr. Dinu G. Patel, M.D.; D.G.O.; M.R.C.O.G. (London) took over the medical practice of Drs. K. and J. MacQuarrie at Killam. The MacQuarries recently left for Camrose where Dr. MacQuarrie is associated with the Westlock Clinic.

Originally from India, Dr. Patel received his degree of M.D. there, and then continued his studies for six years in England, where he took postgraduate work, specializing in Gynaecology and Obstretics. In 1964 he came to Canada and practiced at Sturgis, Saskatchewan. Lacking hospital facilities at Sturgis, Dr. Patel became interested in the situation at Killam, which resulted in the move late in December.

Dr. Patel is married and has two children. His interest is in general practice, with obstretics, having special and high qualifications in the latter field. He hopes, in the course of the next five or six months, to be joined at Killam by a fellow doctor with whom he was associated at Sturgis, Sask. He has purchased the home formerly owned by Dr. MacQuarrie at Killam.

The Basic Education!

Well, here we are in the first week of a brand new year. During the course of the first few days of 1966 we've been flooded with a list of statistical reports showing pretty convincing evidence that the people of Canada have made steady progress in many fields of endeavor, more especially in the areas of material wants and needs. Society is enjoying today the comforts of many new devices, the outcome of scientific adventures. Foods have taken on a new look, for today we have instant oatmeal. Gone is the day when this food had to be cooked in a double-boiler, for now all we have to do is tear open the envelope, pour the contents into a dish, add hot water and stir. There you have the Scot's Delight ready to eat. We have gone far in these fields during the past twelve months, but how far have we progressed in the area of human relations? Two examples will suffice to illustrate that our advancement has been at a snail's pace.

A seminar was held recently by those Canadian Insurance experts whose job it is to deal with cases of employees disabled from employers. Members were informed that since 1960 insurance claims in this respect have increased from $1.8 million to $3.3 million. These cover only bonded losses and it may be assumed that uninsured losses have increased by the same proportion. Previous claims have tempted many people to get into debt over their heads. To compensate for this employers are stealing from their employers to meet obligations. In other words the moral fibre of society is not as sound as it used to be and the tendency is for more people to commit fraud when the opportunity is presented. Fraud seems to be the thing today, what with bribery and corruption involving government personel, and from there extending down to every human level. As the twig is bent, still seems to be an apt phrase.

We hope it is only loose talk, but the executive of the United Auto Workers representing some 25000 union members, have been sounding off again that a general strike is being considered to force settlement of long-standing disputes involving three Toronto newspapers, an oil refinery and a car manufacturer. This is perturbing talk, coming as it does soon after government intervention on the proposed two-day strike in B. C. It has always been traditional that one union strikes to harass one employer. Even here the public is usually the injured third party. But a general strike is aimed at the whole public, an attack on the general community and an attempt to harm the general public by withholding essential goods and services. The hope is that there will be enough public pressure to force employers to capitulate. A throwback to force as a substitute for legal rights.

A general strike is an affront to the rights of community. Unions lack no legal rights, and the law frequently discriminates in favor of rather than against unions. Even loose talk of a general strike is irresponsible and could alienate public sympathy and invite repressive labor legislation.

What About 1965?

Even a casual glance back over the past twelve months brings the conclusion that 1965 was a pretty good year for most Canadians. It was especially good for the industrious and progressive, and with the continued and growing policy of being your brother's keeper, public welfare has resulted in a good year for the handicapped, and even the indolent. Taken on an over-all picture this country enjoyed another year of prosperity.

In other fields of human endeavor we made little progress, outside of tehnological advances. Human relations made little gain, spiritual advancement and acknowledgement is beyond our own capabilities remained almost stagnant, and man's regard for his brothers made little headway. Yet in spite of all this, the minute headway that was made, indicates that man may yet reach the heights for which he was created.

Inflation Or Tight Money!

There never seems to be a very prolonged period of living down the middle of the financial road. You are either being faced with so-called inflation or a period of tight money. Right now attempts are being made in both Canada and the U.S.A. to combat the trend toward inflation, and every attempt to do so is being severely criticized by those who should know better. Mr. Diefenbaker in blasting out at such an attempt to do something about a situation which he himself helped to create, indicates clearly that he is only looking for any attempt to create a "situation" out of something which he does not instigate. So far as the same attempt by Mr. Douglas is concerned, it may well be dismissed without very much consideration for this is a natural outcome of the policies which he advocates. These two leaders might well be asked to explain what they have in mind to counteract the approaching period of inflation, a more insidious and dangerous situation than a repression.

Isn't it funny how a young girl will scream half the night if there's a mouse in the house, and then climb into a car with a wolf.

NO SAFE PLACE

In spite of all the efforts of the Canadian Safety Council in the various provinces of Canada, the holiday death toll continued to mount over the holiday weekend with prospects for more of the same this coming weekend. The only consolation was the fact that the United States death figures were much higher than they had anticipated, whereas in Canada, they may be slightly lower than expected.

If we go on the highways we may be killed. If we stay home we may be burned to death in our bed or become crippled due to a home accident. The pedestrian takes no big a risk as the motorist. The plane passenger, the train and bus passengers, all take their risks too. And some will die of disease or old age.

As the old year goes out, it is a grim spectre we face. There is no safe place in the world any more. We must do our best to avoid the causes of death, knowing that some won't. The result is a continuous round of dangerous living with not a safe place to be found.—Drayton News

MORE JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Does automation really mean fewer jobs? At one time, not so long ago, the majority of people believed that it did. But this attitude seems to be changing. A recent survey conducted among high school students for the Canadian Chamber of Commerce shows that, while a small majority of these young Canadians feel that automation means that we will create new jobs, a large minority, also there is a growing number who regard automation with less fear than before.

The facts seem to justify this change in thinking, too. Despite increasing automation in the past ten years and despite the increasing numbers of people (particularly young people) entering the working force, the number of us employed at mid-August of this year stood at only three or five available labour supply. This is remarkably low. In addition, salaries and wages are the highest in Canada's history and prices are relatively stable, denoting a higher living standard than ever before. It may be that the automation industry needs to successfully meet the challenges of world competition there are still fewer jobs available more job opportunities.—Vermilion Standard

POOR NOW, RICH LATER

Members of town council were "stunned," according to press reports, when 420 civic employees of the Toronto suburb of Etobicoke recently asked to be dropped from the municipality's pension plan. But the president of their union local had a pithy explanation for the workers' wish to opt out. "We don't want to be the richest cripples in the cemetery," he told the stunned councillors.

Pensions, public or private, are not a free gift. They are a form of compulsory savings, and the Etobicoke workers have concluded that they need more of their own money now and less later. They are already paying direct and indirect taxes for the universal Old Age Security pension. Starting in January there will be another tax for the Canada Pension Plan. These two pensions, they feel, will be quite enough, and they would prefer to be excused the payments for a third.

Recovered from their surprise, the councillors said they were sympathetic to the petition, but they would have to obtain legal advice Aside from the two federal plans, they explained, provincial law requires the workers to belong to either the municipal pension plan or to the Ontario government's municipal employee retirement system.

Their governments are going to see to it that they will be rich later — if they live long enough — even if they have to be poor now. —C. J. Harris

"... AND THAT'S ONE FROM THE VIET CONG."

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Cabinet Hot Seat...

OTTAWA—In Prime Minister Pearson's reshuffled cabinet, the power is in Toronto, the pleasure is from Quebec and the hot seat is occupied by loan, craggy Joe Greene.

Mr. Greene, a homespun lawyer whose face reminds some people of Abraham Lincoln's, has the unenviable task of persuading Canada's farmers that they are in good hands with Liberal party

It's a job others—notably Hazen Argue and Harry Hays—have tried and failed. Mr Argue tried it in 1963 when, with a cabinet seat within grasp, he failed to win his own seat.

Mr. Hays took over with his own brand of Alberta ranch talk. He seemed to be getting along with the farmers. The Government could big orders of wheat to Russia and China. Then, in the Nov. 8 election, the roof fell in again

The Liberals failed to make many yards in the farming areas of the East. In the West, they were blanked on the Prairies except for one seat and Mr. Hays himself went down in the general debacle.

Mr Greene is the third man to bat and he comes of his own choice. Before Mr. Pearson's cabinet announcement, Joe Greene was clearly "pinchhitting for a call" as he went around saging federal farm policies had been "too timid, too halting and too late".

In one speech, he painted this as the eleventh hour for Canada's rural areas—the last chance to get legislation to meet farm problems while the farm voice is still strong in the Commons.

Now with portfolio he wanted, Mr. Green faces some immediate problems. He has until the next election to sell farmers on his policies—and to develop policies to sell

But he has only until Jan. 13 to get ready to face the House of Commons — a house where most of the farm voices are on the other side, politically committed to his destruction.

Mr. Greene's past activities in the Commons won't make it his job any easier. With a cutting edge to his voice and a natural talent for needling and heckling, Mr Greene has been one of the most effective rough-and-tumble infighters in the Commons.

The result is an accumulation of scores against Mr. Greene which opposition members may try to pay off now that they have him pinned down in agriculture. A minister is more vulnerable than a backbencher and the new head of the agriculture department will need all his debating skills to hold off the critics

While Mr. Greene does his best to come to terms on behalf of his party with rural Canada, it is evident from Mr. Pearson's new cabinet lineup that the seats of the mighty are in the cities and especially in Toronto.

Heading the list is Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp who adds to the prestige of the finance job the control of the Canadian Wheat Board and any political credit it may generate by sales of grain abroad.

Not far behind is Robert Winters, the Lanesburg, Nova Scotia boy who went to Bay Street by way of Ottawa and became a giant among the tycoons. Now he's back in politics, vault in Ottawa, newly appointed to the trade and coamerce job and very much in the running for Prime Minister Pearson's office when Mr. Pearson gets around to stepping down.

And the third member of the Toronto triumvirate is Paul Hellyer with ambitions of his own and the laurels honestly gained by tackling the tricky problem of integrating Canada's armed forces.

Quebec has no similar three to stack against the Toronto trio. Scandal and bad judgement have told against such men as Maurice Lamontagne, Guy Favreau and Maurice Sauve who, with better management might have been rivals for the top jobs.

Mr. Pearson is probably hoping he has heard the last of the allegations against his ministers. Three ministers against whom varying charges had been made resigned from the cabinet. Mr. Favreau, whose judgment was called in question in the Rivard case, stays on but in a more minor portfolio than Justice which he once held. And Mr. Sauve might have gone up the Cabanet ladder but for the charges of electrical irregularities in his Magdalen Islands riding.

But Mr. Sauve is one of three Quebec Ministers whose jobs could rise in importance once the massive government shakeup proposed by Mr. Pearson is carried into reality.

As minister of rural development, he holds the rural counterpart to the ministry of manpower held by Jean Marchand and the ministry of resources and energy of Jean Luc Pepin.

But all three Quebeckers are given a chance rather than an assured position. All are on the hot-wires of politics—planners rather than believers in the ability of free enterprise to solve all problems.

In their new jobs they have the opportunity to make their plans into realities. What they make of them will be largely up to themselves.

SUGAR AND SPICE
by Bill Smiley

THE ORGANIZATION MAN

All my life I have admired organized people. This doesn't mean that I like them in fact, my usual response to this type is instant hatred, because they make me look so confused in comparison.

You know the sort of person I mean. The chap leering at you from the life insurance ads. Mortgage on house paid up, pension all figured out, and a big, fat annuity when he retires at 80. And dies at sixty-five from sheer boredom because there's nothing left to organize.

Then there's the wife who runs her house like clockwork. Everything on time. Not a dirty ash-tray. Not a half-hour in the day of pure humming for anybody in the family. Surely it isn't her fault that her kids become greasy beatniks the minute they leave home, and her husband goes the normal course, from ulcer to coronary to stroke.

Much as I detest organization I've got in let schizoidian overtake distaste. It's not easy, after a lifetime of comfortable chaos, but I've been driven to it. By my daughter. In a fit of teenage blues the other day, she was sounding off on the futility of life. Naturally, I told her she was crazy, that life was a glor ious adventure.

"Huh! Some adventure! Same old thing, day after day, week after week, year after year. Tell me, Dad, what do you and Mom have to look forward to?"

Well, that struck home. It didn't seem quite the moment to talk about the resurrection and the life over after. Or even about growing old gracefully. Or even about the sheer joy of having the living-room prepared.

It was right there and then I decided on what was right. I don't plunge ahead toward a goal. I merely go around in ever-decreasing circles. I don't seize life by the scruff of the neck and shake it. I merely beg it to leggo and stop shaking me.

And this is the result, who has never made a serious New Year's resolution in my life, have a list of them drawn up. No more of this tottering from crisis to crisis. No more of this being late and lazy, inconsistent and inefficient, unhealthy and unwealthy.

Resolved: that I'm going to stop fighting with my wife. In 20 years, I haven't won a single battle. Why spoil a record like this?

Resolved: that I'm going to stop pampering my kids. The next time I'm in my study, no knock another ten bucks, I'll punch him rigid in the nose. The next time Kim tells me I'm an old fad, I'll take a strap to her. It's going to be difficult, as he outweighs me by 10 pounds, and I couldn't beat that sweet if she committed murder. But organization will make it possible.

Resolved: that I'm going to take regular exercises, something more strenuous than pushing my elbow, striking a match, or taking a cup of joe in bed.

Resolved: that this column will be written at my leisure, not to a deadline which means agonizing through the night to the mailboat at 9:00 p.m. in my slippers.

Resolved: that I will make known plans like this only to teachers, and not arrive daily, gaily, and sak, "Well, where were we yesterday?"

Resolved: that I will stop being slow to forget, to become I like them, and will assiduously court those who can do me some good.

Sorry, we've run out of space. There are 474 other resolutions, and I feel that I've just scratched the surface. But look for a more dynamic, disgusting Bill Smiley in '66. I'm organized.

TOO MUCH PEEK. When these three contestants at the Miss World beauty contest appeared before judges in London, the judges decided the girls were showing too much of their bodies, and they banned the peek-a-boo suits from the pageant. From left is Carol Ann Tidey, Miss Dominion of Canada; Lesley Langley, Miss United Kingdom, who was the world beauty contest; and Maria Goeka, Miss Greece.

Weekly Devotional

Since the fateful month of August, 1945, when the United States Air Force dropped two atomic bombs to destroy two Japanese cities and which burned to death over 100,000 men, women and children, I have been present during serious discussions among religious groups, and groups of veterans. And all of these, while differing on many minor matters, have been of a common mind in that, the human race is living in the most critical and dangerous period of its long existence on earth.

Because the destruction of the world, in some cosmic sense, was predicted so often in the past i. e. 1 Peter 4:7 "The end of all things is at hand, therefore keep sane and sober for your prayers." Such warnings were like the cry of "Wolf", which we had come to ignore.

Now, however, in this year 1966, "he who runs may read" the warnings of impending doom. I have before me The Edmonton Journal of 28th Dec 65, with an article, "N. MOHLMING WARNING ISSUED" whose opening paragraph reads "the heavenward complex war machine being developed in the United States could become so uncontrollable giant and it could run away with itself and carry man unwittingly, unwillingly, into nuclear catastrophe". So warns, and a crack-pot evangelist, but Dr. Barry Commoner, Chairman of the Committee on Science in the promotion of human welfare.

Most people, while otherwise responsible citizens, go about their usual routine of business and pleasure, as though we live in an age when all our problems of survival had been settled. Now, it may be, if a person has no intention of taking any responsibility for the future welfare of their children and grand children he might just as well live as a play-boy.

However, those of us who are brought up in the Christian religion cannot evade our responsibility. If we do, we will be judged by God and history, as tried and found wanting and as unprofitable servants.

Some will ask, as did the jailer of Paul "What shall I do to be saved?" We suggest:

1. Ponder the modern implications of the fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man.

2. Pray for a re-birth in our own lives and in the lives of others.

In a recent article Catherine Arnold Toynbee affirms, "Only a new birth of brotherhood can save us. Modern technology has brought all human beings all over the earth into contact with each other. In the olden age, mankind could survive only if human beings succeed in widening moral horizons. We have to take the whole human race into the fold of our kith and kin."

3. Walk in love. Ephesians 5:1 and 2 Therefore be imitators of God as dear children. And walk in love, as Christ loved us and gave himself up for us, a fragrant offering and sacrifice to God.

There must be a turning away by all people, from the use of violence as a means of obtaining our goals. In any war, from now on, there can be no winners, only losers.

"O God of love, O King of Peace, Make wars through the world to cease;

The wrath of sinful man restrain, Give peace O God, give peace again."

WAR KNOWS NO HOLIDAY. While Canadians were packaging Christmas presents at home, U.S. Air Force servicemen overseas were parceling a far deadlier load, such as this 750 lb. bomb being fastened onto a B-52 bomber at Guam prior to a raid against Viet Cong targets in Vietnam. The Viet Cong, meanwhile, offered a 12-hour ceasefire on Christmas Eve to unarmed soldiers.

THAT—at automation reduces the number of men hours required in production the number of people able to pay the increasing tax load becomes fewer and fewer.

THAT—money has value and can only as long as everyone accepts it as such.

THAT—every "benefit" of the present Welfare State whether it be pensions, subsidies or hospital schemes, must either be paid by the taxpayer or charged up in debt? Absolutely nothing is obtained for nothing.

THAT—the power of money is one of the greatest powers in the whole world.

(By Mrs. F. M. Cantion, Hardisty, Alberta)

"HOME" is one of the most popular words in the English language —and runs a close second to the word "Mother" and so it should be.

"Home" has sort of a magical sound—a heart-arousing cadence which few other words have Anna Vallance explains it as follow—

"Home is where the heart is—and friendship is a guest;
A boat—a fireplace—a hand-clasp, a place where one can rest.
Home is where the heart is—be it a rich or lowly place;
It's where we find a lighted lamp —and a cheerful, loving face.
Home is where the heart-strings fonis a tug that draws you back
Where a wealth of precious memories encompasses for worldly lack
Home is where a Mother's love surrounds with tender care;
Where tousled little children heads bow down in sleepy prayer.
Home is where a Father's strength surrounds, protects his own;
God grant we keep within our hearts the citidel of HOME".

It matters not if that home be a split-level house—the most modern home furnished in the latest and most elaborate style—or if it is just a little, humble abode—even with—maybe—some of the furniture home-made. If love and contentment abounds within those four walls—that home one longs to return to that unfailing love that predominates there at all times—under all circumstances—if, at every meal "Grace" is said in humble thanksgiving for the blessings of life—THAT, my friend,is what God intended a home to be.

This rush-weary world NEEDS havens such as these homes provide Hundreds of men and women to-day, after spending a nerve-racking day at dash, store or office—look forward to returning to the peace and loving devotion always found in a God-fearing home.

When sorrow comes into our home robbing us of a treasured loved one—naturally, friends flock to our door to render sympathy and help where ever they can—and we do appreciate it. But it is the unfailing affection of our own loved ones that is no price-less—that we treasure so dearly.

Also, when there are occasions of rejoicing in the home—how we look forward to the return of absent loved ones—that they may join us in celebrating these happy events.

So many pictures today of "Happy Homes" depict the old-fashioned homes of the yester-years—the dress of the people pictured being so antiquated. Possibly the "Happy Homes" WERE more numerous a decade or so back—as there were at the labor-saving devices them—having too much leisure time.

Frankly, though, I believe if one cared to make inquiry along these lines—one would be surprised at the number of really happy homes —even in our own vicinity today. Therefore, the yesteryears cannot claim them all.

Isn t it the truth, too, as Edgar Guest so aptly puts it—"It takes a lot of livin' in a house to make a HOME." A home should not be just a "Place to hang your hat"—or a place in which to sleep and eat—then leave

Remember those ancient lines—"Mid pleasures and palaces 'tho I may roam—Be it ever so humble—there's no place like HOME" So, my dear readers—we need not live in a palace or even in a most modern house—like the Jones-es—to be right down happy. Let us be thankful for the humble homes that dot the prairies on every side—the homes—some from which came some of our most renowned and famous statesmen, Doctors, clergymen—then we could admit that it truly is NOT the house that makes the home OR the destiny of the people who dwell in them.

So, let us not assume the envious attitude—but be humbly thankful for our homes in which LOVE reigns supreme—where—as in the poems at the beginning of this article—"Friendship is a guest".

May our children—as they start out on life's long road—on paths we do not—or never did know—realize that they have brought much happiness to all in the old home which even though it may be a humble abode—LOVE made it the dearest and most cherished place on earth.

A letter was received from the Village of Forestburg enclosing an agreement between the Village and the M D covering a Dominion-Provincial Centennial project of a part to be known as the Forestburg Centennial Park. The project received the approval of the Council.

Letter from the District Engineer informed council that the 1966 construction carried out on the Natural Resources Road had been carried out satisfactorily, with the exception of the ditch structure. He indicated that the full $12000 grant had been approved for payment.

Notice was received from the Alberta Farm Purchase Board that the application of Richard Wills of Alliance to purchase the N. W. and S. Hall 17-40-12 had received approval of the Board

THE HUNGRY DAYS. Canada has pledged to provide India with an additional $15 million worth of food to help ease the critical shortage caused by that country's worst drought in a century. Canada previously shipped 510 million worth of wheat, and is now distributing milk and nutritional biscuits as emergency food for children and pregnant women. Above shows two young school girls having a meal at Orissa.

Killam Midgets Still Unbeaten

KILLAM—The Killam Midget hockey team maintained their unbeaten streak by winning two games over the weekend in the local league. They hosted the Sedgewick team on Friday night at the Killam arena, and then travelled over to Forestburg on Sunday.

In the first game at home the Killam boys won by a score of 8-3 in a game which produced some very good hockey, and indicated that the players are receiving some good coaching. Goal getters for Killam were: B. Kessler, L. George, J. Hilker (2), G. Graf, K. Taylor, K. Kerr and W. Lewis. For Sedgewick the scores were made by, Bowmo, Peterson and Frost.

On Sunday at Forestburg a crowd of 347 witnessed a game which saw Killam win 7 to 5. Those scoring for Killam were, Kneber, Kerr, Lewis, Hilker, Graf, Hilker and Lewis. For Forestburg the snichers were, Benedict, Moore, and Moore.

In the two games 21 penalties were handed out by the referees, showing that the young players are not getting away with rough and illegal actions.

CANADIAN STUDENTS UNDERSTAND AUTOMATION

Canadian high school students appear to have a better understanding of automation and its values than do American students.

A 1964 survey of American senior high school students indicated that 73% believed automation means fewer jobs whilst a 1965 Canadian Chamber of Commerce survey of graduating high school students indicates only 50% believe automation means fewer jobs.

The Canadian student response indicates a growing appreciation that automation does not necessarily mean fewer jobs but it emphasizes the need for more intensive academic education and skill training.

Weatherman Keeps Everyone Guessing

The dictionary says that doodling is scribbling done mindlessly. The weatherman can't scribble, but he's certainly been absent minded in the way he's been scrambling our weather for the past two weeks

The only good part about the 30 and 40 below cold was that there was very little wind. This we can take in stride, but when he advises that the temperature is going up to twenty some above and then sends along with it a wind which just about gives us the same forty below, he's doodling and that's all there is to it.

Anyway as this is being written the temperature is above the zero mark (Monday) allowing people to shovel their way out.

While there has been considerable snowfall, it is reported that is only about eight inches on the level, which is not at all bad for this time of year. Some drifting has taken place and snow plows have been employed on highways and municipal roads, keeping conditions such that school buses have been able to get through up to the present.

Sledmen are busy little folks when the snow is right for snowmobiles and now find that they were well advised to put up all the feed available.

Cheer up anyway. Spring will be near in a couple of months time and we'll forget all about the cold.

CATCHES COYOTE BY THE TAIL

HARDISTY—On a recent coyote hunt held near Hardisty, Floyd Brenner put aside his gun and caught his coyote by the tail.

Floyd saw the animal coming towards him along a creek bottom and hid behind a bush. As the coyote was going past he jumped out and grabbed it by the tail and hung on.

For a time it was question of who had caught who but the animal was finally dispatched with the aid of a monkey wrench.

HARDISTY LAKER'S DEFEAT LOUGHEED

Hardisty Lakers 12 and under hockey team won their first hockey game on Saturday when they defeated a team from Lougheed. Scores for the Lakers were: Terry Hendricks, Ralph Gilbertsen, David Bromley, Brent Sims, Roy Gilbert, and Jerry McShane.

Stamps Win First Game With Indians

KILLAM—Last Saturday evening the Hardisty Stampeders invaded the Killam Indian Wigwam for the first meeting of the two teams this winter and went home victorious by a score of 3 to 0.

It was a fast, hard-fought game played before a small crowd of fans who braved cold zero temperatures and blowing snow to watch one of the best games so far this season.

The score would have been much higher on both sides except for the excellent saves made by the two goalies

In the first period neither team was able to score although both came close several times.

Stampders notched two counters in the second, the first on a screened slap shot by defenceman Lee Hendricks and the second on a penalty shot by Danny Davies.

In the third period the Stamps scored one unanswered goal, again by Lee Hendricks to make the final score 3 to 0.

Daysland Midgets Win Sunday Game

Daysland Lions Midgets visited Sedgewick on Sunday afternoon and went home winners after a close, hard fought game with the Sedgewick Midgets.

Neither team could get much of an advantage over their opposition as the teams were very evenly matched.

Daysland scored three times on goals by Jerry Nyull, Doug Walbeck, and Lee Fankhanel, all unassisted.

Sedgwick's two goals were both scored by M. Arntzen with J. Anderson getting an assist on the first one.

Eight penalties were handed out by the referees, five to Daysland and three to Sedgewick.

UP TO THE MOUNTAINS. How much water will be available on our tributaries in the coming spring for farming, industrial and domestic use? To find out, teams of snow surveyors are tramping up into the mountains of North America, measuring snow depth. Through these surveys, water supply forecasts can be made well in advance, predicting the depth of floods of water shortages. Drought was especially severe in Ontario and Quebec last year, and some farmers received emergency feed from the federal and provincial governments.

It's Beginning To Hurt!

IT'S BEGINNING TO HURT!

That's what the Economic Council is trying to say in a roundabout way. They're talking about education in Canada. Imagine that! Telling Canadians, who have been priding themselves all these years, that they have the best educational system in the world. But before we pursue that line too far we should say that it is not the fault of the system, but the attitude toward it that is hurting us. Let's take a short look at some of the facts revealed by the Council.

Our pride has been hurt to learn that not the Americans, but the Canadians are the uneducated. What's happened to us? We're supposed to be the intellectuals. Intelligence is supposed to earn you a bigger pay cheque, but we are now told that the fatter American pay is the result of staying in school longer; and all the time we supposed it was due to getting out of school sooner to get on a payroll. A sort of a quick buck now and a small dollar later. Man, we're slow to learn the facts of life. We learn that a year in an American school is just as good as a year in Canada, and that a higher percentage of American youth are staying in high school longer, and going to University to win degrees. While Canada has a larger amount of capital per worker and a better heritage of land and natural resources, this is more than offset by a lower educational level. In America 45 percent of male workers had four years of high school while in Canada the percentage drops to 24. It may be hard to take, but the Council has learned that the United States has been steadily improving its standard of education, while Canada has been going in fits and starts. It looks as though it might be good business to start closing the gap.

Highly educated people in Canada are a scarce commodity and for this reason their salaries are higher here. Some action is definitely needed to keep more students in school longer.

Quietness May Mean Something!

There has been an unusual quietness on the political front the past few weeks and Canadians are concerned with what this may mean. Of course politicians are busy, we presume, mapping out the strategy to be pursued as parliament opens. There is much of importance facing the country in the weeks ahead and the attitudes adopted by legislators will indicate what results the nation will reap. The quietness, it appears to us, spells out the fact that political parties are beginning to realize that the public is fed up with bickering, irresponsible statements, jockeying for position, and petty selfishness, and has a deep desire for those they hire to get on with responsible administration. If this is not what the quietness means, and the lull is only a time out to load the guns for a continuation of past activities, then Canada is in for another prolonged period of inactivity on the political front. We would like to hope that common sense and responsibility will have priority when parliament opens this month, and it is the responsibility of back-bench members to see that this condition will exist. They have more power than they realize, apparently, and a manly display of this power could raise the stature of parliament to the height where it once more commands the respect of the nation.

Some Good In Everything!

Like the man said, 'it's going to be warmer tomorrow thank goodness". The weather man had predicted a high of 20 below. The way things have been going lately that does sound pretty warm. In spite of the cold though, people here seem to manage to get done what has to be done outside.

Many things can go wrong in severely cold weather, causing delays and inconvenience to any number of people, and those who have to right the wrong and bring order out of chaos must subject themselves to the mercy of the weather. We have become so modern that an interruption in the supply of power for instance can cause panic in severe weather. But thanks to the efficiency of suppliers and their staffs, there is little delay in getting things back to normal. We owe a good deal to those who keep things functioning normally. Heating service men who oblige in off-duty hours when your furnace fails; the milk man who brings your supply to your door when the baby is just ready to throw a tantrum; the mailman who gets the mail through in spite of cold and snowdrift; grocery boy who brings the can of beans you forgot to order that morning; the paper boy who, wrapped to the eyebrows in mufflers, gets your paper to you just when you get ready to blow your stack because if you don't get settled down to read the day's news your wife will find some chore to be done. All these people, and many more, are the ones who keep things running smoothly in the dead of winter, and to them we owe our thanks.

ABOUT MOST ANYTHING

by A.C.B.

In the past few months a number of readers have suggested that the publisher of the Community Press should write a column in the paper. I've decided to try it for a few weeks. If you like it, let me know and it will continue. As the name implies "Most Anything" that is printable is apt to show up here at sometime.

Congratulations are in order to the local District Agriculturalist, Mr. Art Edwards, for the fine showing he made on T.V. Wednesday evening last week. Every big star had to get a break somewhere and this may be yours Art.

In this weeks paper will be found the first release of statistics on the current B.H.L. Indeed an oldtimer in the league, (although still a young man) Brian Gamme of the Killam Indians is tied for top spot in the individual scoring race. As I remember, Brian's been playing in the B.H.L. since about 1953 and has always been rather bothersome around opposition goal crease.

Did you hear about this sign that was seen in the window of a ladies dress store: "Our lingerie is the finest and all smart women wear nothing else." Well, sometimes not much more.

Dear Sir:

I feel there are some "unsung heroes" in our community that deserve recognition and thanks. I speak of the local Fish Trader and employees. No matter how busy or slack is the season one always gets pleasant, efficient and courteous service; a very good example of true public servants which is all too rare in our day.

Having lived in several towns and cities before, I feel I'm able to make an honest comparison and we want them to know we appreciate this type of service.

A Very Satisfied "Customer."

Just a word of thank you for all the free "advertising" we enjoy during the year through the Church Notices column of your paper.

On behalf of my congregations of the Sedgewick Lutheran Parish and myself personally we want to express our appreciation for this service and also commend you for your line paper and news coverage.

We wish for you a very successful and happy year in 1966.

SHARE THE WEALTH

The government of Canada is concerned over the results of a survey which showed that there are a lot of poor people in this rich and prosperous Dominion. So a campaign is being organized in Ottawa to help the poor.

We are all for helping the poor. Most people in fairly comfortable circumstances are like minded.

"The unequal distribution of this world's goods," wrote famous historian Arnold Toynbee, "has been transformed . . . from an avoidable evil into an intolerable injustice."

That means that the poor people will not stand for the poor getting poorer and the rich getting richer. There will be all kinds of disturbances if the situation is not rectified. So we will be interested to observe how Canada's share the wealth campaign unwins out.

A lot of rich people had better be, too!—Brooks Bulletin.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Hopeless Timetable . . .

OTTAWA—The minority Liberal Government may not topple in the New Year. But it will surely totter.

Facing a new Parliament on January 18, and a 1966 which seems to offer so little in the way of political joy, the Liberals are more vulnerable than ever.

This is not only because of their poor showing in the election, though that is a factor. Mr. Pearson's careless gamble on a majority failed, and he and his whole government have suffered a diminution in stature.

Nor is it because of the strength and ingenuity of the opposition. There has been no change there. John Diefenbaker remains, John Diefenbaker, Tommy Douglas remains. Tommy Douglas, and so on. There is no more and perhaps less to fear from these somewhat used politicians than there has been to the post.

What will keep the Government vulnerable — and teetering — in the New Year is not pressure of votes, but pressure of work and of time.

The Government needs to look efficient. But it won't be able to because it faces a huge backlog of work. It has too many deadlines to meet, too many loose ends to tie.

From the moment the new session starts, the Government will be on the run.

First there will be the Throne Speech debate, which lasts eight days, during which the Government will be assailed by non-confidence motions.

Then at the first opportunity the Government will have to seek grants of money to carry on its routine operations. And it will have to seek approval of the money it spent during the time Parliament was not in session.

The opposition will also clamour for an early opportunity to examine government departmental spending and administration. No spending estimates for the current fiscal year have yet been approved.

In the meantime, the Government will be moving inexorably towards important deadlines on redistribution and banking.

The reports of the ten independent redistribution commissions — one of for each province — will be tabled in the Commons by the end of January.

Members of Parliament have 30 days within which to object to the new electoral maps which have wrought huge changes in almost every riding.

If any ten members object to any report, a Commons debate on the objection must be called within 15 days. Then the report is referred back to the proper commission, which will have the final say on whether or not to accept the objections.

Quite a lot of debate is expected on these matters as dear to a member's heart. That debate must come early in the session and will add inevitably to the pressure on the timetable.

A second important deadline has to do with legislative action to permit Canada's chartered banks to continue operation.

The law requires revision of the Bank Act, and renewal of bank charters, every ten years. This revision has been delayed while a Royal Commission on Banking and Finance studied important changes in the Act.

The Royal Commission reported about 18 months ago, but Parliament has not yet acted to revise the Bank Act. The bank charters keep expiring, and the government keeps asking Parliament to extend the charters.

The latest extension ran out December 31, but since Parliament was not sitting, the charters continue until 60 sitting days after Parliament next meets.

In other words, some kind of action on banking must be taken by this new Parliament within 60 sitting days from January 18.

It seems clear that the bank charters will have to be extended again. There would hardly be sufficient time to carry out the far-reaching amendments to the Bank Act.

The amendments will have to be studied in committee, and testimony will be heard from the Bank of Canada, the chartered banks, financial institutions, economic experts, and representatives of the provinces.

The sample request to extend the charters again should be good for an intense, and perhaps prolonged debate on banking and finance.

These important deadlines will almost certainly create difficulties for the Government. No matter what it does, it can be accused to neglecting something else.

And it will have to deal with them while it's plunged up to its neck in other issues.

There will be Federal-Provincial conferences, for example, on new tax arrangements, on crime, on poverty. There will be debates on old age pensions, on transportation legislation that has already been delayed too long.

There are current controversies on the constitution, on abolition of the death penalty, on morality in government, on bilingualism and biculturalism.

The task of the opposition shouldn't be too difficult. All it has to do is keep the Government from looking efficient. That shouldn't be hard with a government that will be on the run, under pressure and off-balance for much of the year.

Fourteen Postage Stamps To Be Released In '66

The Honourable Rene Tremblay, Postmaster General, announced today that the stamp program for 1966 has been revised in order to allow for addition of two new stamps to the philatelic schedule

On June 30th, the floral emblem series will reach its culmination with the issue of a stamp featuring the Canadian coat of arms, and a maple leaf. The date of issue was chosen to coincide with the July 1st Dominion Day, July 1st. This stamp will be similar in size and format to the floral emblem and armorial bearing stamps of each of the ten provinces and the ten provinces and the Northern Territories and will complete the series begun in 1964.

Mr Tremblay listed the revised stamp schedule as follows: Space Research — following launching of the Alouette satellite; Alberta Floral — January 19, Saskatchewan Floral — January 19, Newfoundland Floral — February 23, Yukon Floral — March 23, Northwest Territories Floral — March 23; 300th Anniversary of La Salle's Arrival in Canada — April 13, Highway Safety — May 2, London Conference — May 26; Canada Coat of Arms (floral series) — June 29; Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy — July 27; Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference — early September; Christmas 5c and 3c — October 13.

All stamps, except the 3c Christmas, will be of the 5c denomination.

Mr Tremblay remarked that this record number of new stamps issues is a direct reflection of the encouraging public interest in recent Canadian postage stamps.

WARDROBE PLANNING
What Do I Need?

A wearing guide shows how items from your inventory list can be combined into attractive ensembles for the different activities in your life. It is also helpful in determining what things are needed to complete your wardrobe.

To make a wearing guide use a large piece of paper or several sheets taped together. Across the top place these ten labels:

Activities, Dress or Suit, Skirt or Slacks, Blouse, Sweater or Jacket, Coat, Shoes, Hose, Accessories, Underclothing.

Write below the Activity label all the activities you partake in. e.g., housework, shopping, club work, church, social, etc.

Starting with the activity for which an outfit will be worn, select items from the inventory list which can be worn together and jot them down on the same horizontal line of the chart. Try several combinations of clothes in order to make outfits that appear different. Cross items off the inventory list as you transfer them to the wearing guide.

Fill in items on the wearing guide which you would need to buy in order to complete an outfit. Circle these items.

Decide which of the articles remaining on your inventory list are worth keeping and what needs to be done to make them useful. Give away clothing you can't or won't use to someone who can use it.

To keep your wardrobe planning within personnel limits, you and your family will need to determine how much you can afford to spend for clothes in the coming year. Clothing is a flexible expense. The amount you allow for it will depend on your income, demands on that income and how important clothing is to you. When you have decided on the amount you can afford to spend, you are ready to begin your spending plan.

Thirteen pieces in a "baker's dozen" originated when King Louis of France warned all bakers who gave under measure that they would be hanged.

A FAVORABLE BALANCE in the past seven years, Canada has exported more than $390 million worth of goods to Red China, primarily through wheat sales. Imports have also been going up from China, but far more slowly. A trade official in Ottawa reports, "We're not exactly proud of our sales to the Communist countries, but since we have the products and they require them, we intend to continue selling them all we can."

Study Reveals Existence Of Povety In Canada

OTTAWA— Canada's rural poor subsist in some areas on monthly incomes as low as $11.71 per person — consisting of welfare and family allowances. This and other disturbing facts are revealed in a study conducted for ARDA by the Canadian Welfare Council.

The findings of the CWC study, designed to provide an "image of poverty" in Canada by ascertaining from the poor themselves how they live and how they feel about being poor, are published in a report released today by ARDA. The 300-page, bilingual report, made public in Ottawa at the Prime Minister's federal-provincial conference on poverty, covers four years defined as poor by national comparison, namely Inverness County in Nova Scotia; Gatineau, Papineau and Pontiac counties in Quebec; Lanark County in Ontario; the interlake region of Manitoba.

Some 280 families in these low-income rural areas were interviewed in the study. The case histories include data on a father whose total income — from social assistance — is $164 a month, which must support himself, his wife and 12 dependent children. This man, in his 50's, disabled and unable to work, sees little hope of change.

Appalling living conditions were discovered in some homes, but rarely, if ever, were these conditions seen as the cause or the symptom or moral or social degradation, as is commonly supposed.

Average per capita monthly income for the families interviewed was found to be highest in Lanark County, at $44, followed by the three Quebec counties with $41. Manitoba $35, and Inverness $28. For the most part, families derive income from primary industries — farming, fishing, woodcutting — and unskilled labor.

Isolation and their inability to do anything about it plague the rural poor; control of the systems that produce income is in the cities and towns and the rural poor do not share in that control. They are torn between traditional patterns of employment and the necessity of moving out to seek employment. They are afraid to take the chance of moving and become resigned to remaining poor at home rather than risk starving in the big cities.

Practically all the families agree on the importance of education and want their children to have the best, so they might be equipped for suitable employment which, they realize, is to be found only outside their community.

"If there is a single conclusion to be drawn from the study," says project director David Woodsworth, "it is that the poor are not degraded, and that there is a great deal that can be done to restore to them a just share in the life of the country. These people are hard-working and infinitely patient. They are open to the possibility of change, but they are pervaded by the sense of inadequacy of their own resources to meet the demands of a changing world."

Regional directors for the ARDA sponsored study were: Inverness County, George Caldwell of the Canadian Welfare Council, Ottawa; Quebec counties, Dr. Marie Hamel of the Canadian Welfare Council; Lanark County, Dr. Bessie Touzel; Interlake (Manitoba) region, Lloyd Looton of the Winnipeg Community Welfare Planning Council.

The Seed For Your Drill Box, Is It Good Enough?

The first question western farmers should ask themselves in 1966 is: "Will the grain I Produced in 1965 make good seed"? Prolonged wet harvesting weather last fall, combined with heavy frosts while the damp grain lay in the swath, was responsible not only for reducing yields and lowering grades but for seriously lowering the value of the grain for seed purposes.

Careful Cleaning Essential. Many grain growers penalize themselves by planting poor quality, weed infested seed—a fact that is borne out by the results of seed drill-box surveys. A recent drill survey disclosed that over 40 per cent of the farmers in Manitoba planted poor, inferior seed in 1965 although they would not make the minimum seed grades. The main reason why over half the samples of the Elk Manitoba 65 ban samples fell into a "rejected" seed class was the presence of weed seeds. Should it or not, one of the drill-box samples had a weed seed content of 2,052 weed seeds per pound of grain. The 1965 Manitoba seed drill survey showed beyond a doubt that country elevators grain-cleaning plants are equipped to do a good job of cleaning seed.

Germination Tests Needed. The results of germination tests our own Seed Laboratory has completed on over 6,000 farmers' seed-grain samples from the 1965 crop show that in over 40% of the samples of wheat, oats, barley and flax tested the percentage germination was less than 75%. Moreover, 12% of the wheat and barley samples and over 20% of the samples of oats and flax gave a germination percentage of less than 50%. In view of this situation we strongly recommend that farmers have a germination test made on the grain they intend to use for seed in 1966. One effective solution to this problem is, of course, for farmers, through the "over-delivery quota", to exchange their home-grown seed for some Registred and Certified seed.

Seed the Best. This is one year when farmers in Western Canada would be well advised to use only grain that has been carefully cleaned and tested for germination. Failure to take these steps this spring is bound to cost bushels when grain crops are harvested this fall. Don't take a chance! By test—Sow the Best in 1966.

Teenagers Go Home

Today's teenagers complain a lot about "nothing to do" and "no place to go." Well, Judge Philip B. Gilliam of Denver's Juvenile Court has a suggestion for them:

"Teenager, go home".

Gilliam, who in 1963 was voted the nation's "outstanding juvenile court judge" and who has handled more than 80,000 delinquency cases, has given high school graduates in Colorado and Wyoming some pointed advice lately. He said:

"The answer is, go home".

"Hang the storm widows, paint the woodwork. Rake the leaves. Mow the lawn. Shovel the walk. Wash the car. Learn to cook. Scrub some floors. Repair the sink. Build a boat. Get a job.

"Help the minister, priest or rabbi, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army. Visit the sick. Assist the poor. Study your lessons. And then when you are through—and not too tired—read a book."

Judge Gilliam, 56, and father of four, admist he thinks "work is the thing for kids." This theory is based on solid sociological fact: the child who has a place in society, especially the working child, seldom gets into trouble.

Gilliam believes it is unfortunate that "today's children are not allowed to work at odd jobs such as I had when I was a kid. Most of them get too much, too soon. The ones who don't have enough also don't get a chance to learn about it."

But this is no excuse for the teenage lament that there's "nothing to do," he adds. Gilliam tells teenagers:

"Your parents do not owe you entertainment. Your village does not owe you recreation facilities. The world does not owe you a living.

"But you owe the world something. You owe it your time and energy and your talents so that no one will be at war or in poverty, or sick, or lonely again.

"In plain simple words, grow up. Quit being a cry-baby. Get out of your dream world and develop a backbone, not a wishbone, and start acting like a man or lady."

Gilliam notes that teenagers who keep begging for "benefits" are old enough to take on a few "responsibilities." If they're mature enough to demand privileges, he says, they're mature enough to accept some of the responsibilities their parents have been carrying for years.

Most teenagers, Gilliam adds, are good, responsible citizens. "Their percent of our children get into trouble, 97 percent don't," he points out.—Volens Advocate.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of Mrs. Phoebe Johnson, wife and mother, who left us January 1st, 1964.

Sweet is the memory that will not end,
That she is dead; she's just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of her hand
She has wandered into an unknown land
Ever remembered and sadly missed by: Husband Ervist, Daughters, Mrs. Ethel Linder, Mrs. Grace and Ken and Families; Daughter Bonnie, Deceased. 35-1-p

In Memoriam

JOHNSGAARD—In loving memory of my dearest husband, Louis, who passed away January 14th, 1964.

When at your bed all day I stood,
And watched you fade away;
I saw you suffer, heard you sigh,
All I could do was stand by.
God took your hand, and we had to part,
He caused your pain, but broke my heart;
You are still with me in all I do,
Your love will guide and see me through.
Now life is lonely. I try not to complain.
I trust in God we'll meet again;
Your resting place I'll tend with care,
Part of myself went with you there.
Lovingly remembered and sadly missed by your devoted wife, Clara. 35-1-p

Memory Lane

(By Mrs. F. M. Cantlon, Hardisty, Alberta)

SULPHUR AND MOLASSES
(U—S—C—)

Many of our old-timers can recall—with nostalgia—when the following remedies and cures administered in different members of the family in times of injury and illness —proved most effective —

In cases of stomach-ache—castor oil—given in generous doses was given—especially to children. Or maybe boiled barley water—or even the humble cow's milk boiled and a sprinkle of salt and pepper added relieved many stomach disorders

Good old onion syrup was doled out possibly every hour or two for a bad cough. If said cough did not respond favorably to the onion syrup—a mustard plaster was laid on the chest and back. (Behind the shoulder blades). If THIS method failed—a raw onion was put through the meat-grinder with a good-sized piece of pork fat—made into poultices—warmed—and laid on the patient's lungs—front and back—with marvelous results.

In most homes every child was given what was commonly known as "Rocky Mountain Tea" one cupful to each child every Friday night. This was supposed to clean out the system of all accumulated poisons. The "Tea" was given on a Friday night as the children had no need to "Run out bech" so often during school hours.

Remember that most un-palatable sulphur—and molasses concoction which was given to every member of the family every spring to purify the blood?

If a boil or carbuncle made its appearance—a poultice of hot bread and milk was applied. But if this means failed to bring it to a head—a poultice of melted lye soap was placed on the effected part. However, the lye soap was the resort—except Epsom salts—as these two methods were extremely painful—although sure-cure.

If any foriegn substance got into the eye—the best known remedy was a flax-seed poultice—or one made of steeped green tea leaves

Plain hot water with a generous amount of salt added—then submerge the effected foot never failed to ease the pain and take out the poison from stepping on a rusty nail Tea also purified the wound.

Toothache? A bit of cotton wool soaked in liniment and inserted in the cavity served the purpose until the tooth could be extracted.

If there was no olive oil in the house—and more than likely, there wasn't—a piece of cotton wool soaked in cream-separator oil and put in an aching ear soon eased the pain.

In these early years "Asperine" were virtually un-heard of on the prairie home-steads.

Sulpha drugs? Penicillin? Celebrex? Periodic shots for youngsters for the prevention of as many childhood diseases? No, my friend. These were not even dreamed of in those early yesteryears.

We used the material and knowledge which we had at the time—and, if it were a mild case—those remedies served the purpose well.

Correspondents Touring New Zealand

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Since our last letter we have covered a continent! We headed inland from Christchurch (South Island) in what are known as the Southern Lakes. Some forty miles from the coast we encountered a large arid plain, where sheep stations are located much like in Australia. The names dotted along the highway are not towns but farm houses. A sudden drop in the road revealed a long narrow lake which extended in the desert for 10 miles, and had a glacial head some 20 miles back in the mountains. Acres and acres of multi-colored lupins edged the lake They are shrub-like and like snap-dragon, grow to a height of 2 feet and smell like clover. Party miles down the road is another lake backed by a 12,349 foot mountain, the largest peak in New Zealand. Both lakes are a bright green and either one makes Lake Louise look like a greasy slough.

We crossed a pass and got into typical Kamloops country. High hills and large rock outcroppings and dry grass surrounding fast moving rivers. We were in the heart of an old gold rush area where millions of dollars in gold were taken from the rivers and hills. Placer miners still work the rivers and are reported to be making good wages. However the rivers make better fishing grounds. They are fast and deep. The area abounds in old ruins. Here and there just an old ordinary sitting in the most unlikely place. Stone walls and gaping roof mark and old hotel. Orchards now stand parched on the river banks between the sharp gorge walls.

We drove down one of the gorges to the third lake. This one like the next two we saw in that their bottoms are many feet below sea level, while their surface are 1,600 feet above sea level. The average depth is 1680 feet. The water temperature varies only 2 degrees summer and winter It is a most popular ski resort, even though the area is the hottest in N. Z. in the summer The Lake (Wakitipour or Hollow of the Giant accordcng to legend) and the town of Queenstown form what is supposed to be THE tourist resort of N.Z. The population swells from 2,000 to 20,000 for the annual three week Christmas holiday season. We pushed on to get away from the crowds, in order to see thing instead of people.

We went back into some green country on our way to the Lake Of Rushing Water Here we met again an elderly couple from Invercargill who were at our table on the ship. They were just returning from a world cruise, and offered us the use of their cabin at the lake. They told us it wasn't "Plush"—the New Zealand term for fancy—but had modern conveniences. They call cabins a "Crib" here on the north island and a "Batch" on the north island

It poured the first day we were there and we were glad to have a cabin to get out of the rain and spend a lazy day. We had been on the go for three weeks and needed a rest. The next day we took a side trip to the west coast in Piercland. The road followed mountain valleys up to the Haast Saddle. This is a pile of rock 4360 feet high, and is proof of going over it they go though. The tunnel is 3/4 mile long and has a 1/10 slope, one-way traffic and leaks water Dixieee is supposed to once have written Napoleon that the Fountains of Rome spouted water from the added pleasure. It struck us that it was no place for a water fall either. We were glad to see the sun again.

The tunnel was built during the depression by pick, shovel and wheel barrow to provide employment. Here the road dropped quickly to sea level and what would be a grand sight but for the sandflies.

From Te Anau we headed to the south coast and went as far south as we could They have a sign post informing you that it is 2,892 miles to the south pole. Our friend showed us through the Port of Bluff where most of the frozen mutton is shipped from New Zealand. This goes though a freezing plant which precenses the lamb for export. We arranged to tour the wool store which collects, grades, sells and exports the fleeces, also managed to see Sheep being sheared on a farm. In this area known as Southlands, we saw many sheep in one hour than you would in a lifetime in Canada. The whole area is flat and the land is in many less productive, only they have installed drainage tiles. The land varies from 10 to 20 feet above sea level and needs drainage every year. The farmers look extremely wealthy.

Currently we are at Dunedin, called the "Edinburgh of the South. Personally Edmonston strikes me as being just as Scotch. It is a large place built on several hills sloping down to the harbor. To confuse traffic even more, the centre is built like an octagon with streets branching out like spokes on a wheel. We spent Christmas here, while it rained all day and was quite chilly. We enjoyed opening parcels brought from home with us. Were pleased to find some Christmas cake in the lot which we had unwittingly smuggled past customs. Took a quick tour of the Peninsula in the afternoon, and found of all things, a genuine 27-room castle It seemed out of place here in such a new country, but was built by an Australian banker at the time of the gold rush.

We are both quite well and hope the winter isn't too severe back home —George and Beverly Davi son

GRAIN MOVEMENT IN ALBERTA

"Grain movement in Alberta to be given every consideration" states Mr. Emerson, President of the C.P.R. in reply to a telegram from F.U.A President Paul Babey. Mr. Babey, on Tuesday, sent the following telegram, to N. R. Crump, Chairman, C.P.R., "With the close of navigation on the Great Lakes, we request your fullest co-operation in an endeavor to bring grain shipments and deliveries from Alberta up to an equal basis with the other provinces Present quotas show Alberta with 75% of its points still on a three bushel quota or less, as compared to 50% and 25% respectively in Saskitchewan and Manitoba. The majority of these low quota points are in areas serviced by the C.P.R." "With the usual seasonal slowdown over the holiday period, we do not expect too much change until after the New Year," adds Mr Babey, "but we look hopefully forward to improved grain shipments in the New Year."—D. H. Galbraith, Executive Assistant.

Itinerary Set For 1967 Centennial Caravans

Eight huge caravans, each composed of eight 79-foot truck and trailer units, will tour Canada in 1967, taking the story of Canada to the people of Canada. Inside the trailers, exhibits, dioramas and pictures will trace the history of Canada's exploration, exploitation and development from the time before the coming of the white man to the present day.

Centennial Caravan No 7 will tour Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in 1967, entering the province at Milk River on May 1, and leaving from Drumheller on November 2.

During its tour, the Caravan will travel 8,030 miles, and will make 95 exhibit stops. All sites have been surveyed, and recommendations for improvement made where necessary. In 1966 a re-survey will be conducted at which time, in addition to checking the sites, arrangements will be made for billeting and scheduling for caravan staff members.

In addition to the interior exhibits, there will be regional exhibits arranged outside the caravan, to be viewed by persons waiting to enter

A staging area will also be provided, and the Chief of the Trains and Caravan Division of the National Centennial Committee, Mr. L. J Maiden, has expressed the hope that this area will be used to present local talent of a nature suitable to the occasion. Folk singing, dancing pageants, plays or musical presentations would enhance the exhibit, and other local celebrations pertaining to the commemoration of Canada's Centennial of Confederation may be planned to co-incide with the Caravan's visit.

Further information pertaining to the caravan or other Centennial events planned for 1967 may be obtained by contacting Mr. J.R.D Findlay, Centennial Co-ordinator for Alberta, 421 Legislative Building, Edmonton.

THE YOUNG SPINSTERS

Dad, we should be glad, you and I. Glad that we got a mate when we did, 20 or 30 years ago. We'd never measure up to what the girls demand today

I discovered this the other day, during a panel discussion in one of my Grade 12 classes. Topic was "Early Marriages." Participants were four bright, attractive girls of 17 or 18

Well, they really opened my eyes. In fact, I was shocked and dismayed by the hard-boiled, materialistic attitude of these young ladies. Generally they had the right idea — that teenage marriages are a mistake — but for all the wrong reasons

I used to think that marriage was based on mutual respect, physical attraction, shared interests, love. That shows you how old-fashioned I am.

It seems that these days a successful marriage is a combination of economic essentials and psychological clap-trap

First of all, you have to have security. This rules out early marriages. It means the couple must have enough money for at least down payments on the house, furniture, appliances. It follows that the girl must finish school and take a job and save. The boy must get through law school or medicine (no plumbers for these kids!). Again, it follows that he's about 30, she's at least 25, before they can think of marriage.

I could have reminded them, but didn't that most of them would never have been born if their parents had waited for security before marrying.

Second they said, teen-agers are "emotionally immature" enough for marriage. I don't quite know what that means. Right out of 10 of the married adults I know have tantrums or drink too much, flare with jealousy, fight over trifles, fall in love, hate bitterly. In short, they are normal human beings. But they're not emotionally mature.

Another point the kids brought up was that teen-age girls are not prepared to face up to the complexities of married life; they can't cook; they know nothing about raising children; they can't manage a budget. Apparently the answer to this is for the girl to complete her education and work for a few years. This prepares her for marriage.

Thus, if she has studied typing or philosophy or hairdressing or embalming, and made a living for a year or two, she's all set for cooking, child-bearing and budget-balancing. I don't follow the logic, but I always was a little dense about feminine thinking.

Girls, I can show you women of 30, career girls, who can't cook a TV dinner, don't know one end of a baby from the other unless it's crying, and couldn't handle the budget of a Sunday School class without putting it on the rocks.

Another serious suggestion was that marriage should be delayed until both parties have had a chance to travel and see the world. The implication was that after you're married and had kids, you never do more than take a Sunday drive.

Hell, I have a nephew of 17 who was born in Yellowknife, North West Territories, and has grown up in South America, the West Indies, Holland and New foundland. I have a niece, 18, who has lived in England, France and Germany. Those kids didn't slow their parents down

One of the girls said boys of 19 or 20 are not ready to assume the responsibilities of marriage. Some aren't. But some men of 30 aren't and never do. I've seen boys of 19 or 20 in charge of a million dollars worth of aircraft, and hundred lives.

I could scarcely refrain from telling these complacent pre-marrieds that their grandmothers were married at 16 or 17, their grandfathers at 20, coping with a life they couldn't even imagine.

Pat, that I'm in favor of teenage marriages. However forbid. Our society has all the cards stacked against the young lovers. But there's something sad about their attitude.

WHEAT CROP THIRD BIGGEST

The 1965 all-Canada wheat crop of 677 9 million bushels is the third largest in Canadian history. This final estimate, based on late-October yields and released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, represents a considerable reduction from the record crop that had been expected in August; yet it is 12 percent above last year's and 43 percent above the 1954-63 average.

Of this wheat crop, the three Prairie Provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba accounted for about 661 million bushels, chiefly spring wheat with some durum and relatively small quantities of winter wheat. The remaining 16.9 million bushels comprised 13 4 million bushels of winter wheat grown in Ontario and small quantities of spring wheat grown in other Provinces.

The decreasing estimates of the 1965 wheat crop were apparent in the three DBS reports of this year. In August, the Bureau forecast Prairie production at 743 million bushels — even above the all-Canada record, 723.4 million in 1963. In September, the forecast slipped to 697 million, and finally in November, to 681 million. —Alberta Wheat Pool Budget.

New Homes For Indians

Twelve Indian and Metis families allocated by the 1965 flooding conditions at Slave Lake are occupying new houses, provided under an agreement program financed through the Alberta Commercial Corporation, Department of Industry and Development. The program was instituted following appeals for assistance by the Kapuppin Housing Co-operative Ltd. at Slave Lake. All 12 of the transportable housing units have been located temporarily on a five acre site outside the town limits.

Under the program, tenents rent the units from the co-operative, which is responsible for management of the modern, low-rental scheme.

Each unit contains two or four bedrooms with a central living and dining area, providing a total living space of about 600 square feet. The homes are equipped with a combination oil cooking and heating stove. In addition, since many of the families are large, double bunk beds have been placed in the children's bedrooms Gendall Building Supplies Ltd., Edmonton, constructed the units at a cost of $58,325 or about $4,860 each.

Total cost of the project was approximately $58,000. This included purchase of the site, the units, construction of an access road, clearing and fencing.

The temporary location was provided by the Commercial Corporation under a one year license granted by the Department of Municipal Affairs At the expiry of the permit the houses are to be moved. Occupants have the opportunity of purchasing the units through the existing rental-purchase agreement between the housing co-operative and the Corporation, provided the homes are moved to a permanent site. Otherwise, the corporation has the option of disposing of the units or transferring them to other areas.

Under their existing financing agreement with the Alberta Commercial Corporation, the Kapuppin Housing Co-operative have constructed two permanent residences. Another two are nearing completion.

Baptist Church

The Sunday School contest for the fourth quarter of 1965 was won by Pamela Bartsch with 1393 points. Second place went to Ruby Anderson with 1359 points. Pamts were given for attendance, bringing visitors, knowing the golden text, bringing Bible, being on time, and having the lesson studied. Pamela had sixteen visitors during the quarter

Rev. W. Sipla, of Wetaskiwin, was in charge of the Sunday services and also held a service at the Auxiliary Hospital on Sunday afternoon. He was accompanied by Mrs. Sipla and family.

Thanks to the Laymen who are continuing the attractive church bulletins. Anyone wishing to receive a souvenir copy of this bulletin may do so by writing to the Killam Baptist Church.

A letter was received from Rev. Grynauskas stating that they had arrived safely and were quite settled in their new home. For anyone wishing their address it is as follows: Rev. and Mrs. A. Grynauskas, 10003-96 Street, Grande Prairie, Alberta.

The Bible Today

1966 has been designated The Year of the Bible by the U.S. Senate, and by most Governors in the United States of America. It is expected that others will follow this lead. Already many of the larger denominations in the U.S. and churches have agreed to this designation.

The 180th Anniversary of the American Bible Society occurs this year. Many kinds of celebration are being planned in order to make it significant. Among the recommendations set forth are: prepare and provide special Scriptures for the unmet needs of millions of Americans among minority groups, support the formation of National Advisory Councils overseas, leading to National Bible Societies; understand the objectives of the United Bible Societies with increased support and encouragement; launch a Bible Brothers' Fellowship, encouraging Christians to give Bibles to adopted brothers in other lands; and encourage Scripture reading and study

The New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra is preparing to give a "Year of the Bible" concert in Philharmonic Hall, New ork City, on November 15, with Mr Malcolm Sargent of the London Symphony conducting.

According to one scientist, the human brain could store about 20 times more information than is contained in the 9,000 volumes of the Library of Congress.

WOULD REDUCE RED WHEAT SALES

The unanimous decision of most United States leaders and their efforts to disrupt Canadian grain sales is again typified in a recent news item which informs that a United States Senator has proposed the dumping of 2 four-month leaks and old alliance between the U.S., Canada, Argentina and Australia to control grain shipments to Communist countries. In his opinion, if grain shipments to China, Russia and other communist countries were reduced, these nations would be in no position to offer support to other countries seeking so-called "national liberation."

The Senator feels that loss of revenue from wheat sales would be offset by the savings in defense expenditures now necessary for protection against communist subversion and aggression. Presumably Canadian losses in grain sales would be offset by U.S. savings on fewer war expenditures.

The Senator will find little support among Alberta Wheat Pool delegates who for years have favored expansion of grain sales to all countries.

Rabies Situation

The continuous occurrence of rabies in southern Saskatchewan makes the disease of concern to Albertans although it is not present in this province. The last positive case was diagnosed in Alberta in 1957.

Information supplied by Dr. A. E. Lewis, District Veterinarian with the Federal Health of Animals Branch, shows that rabies is still pretty well confined to an area south of the Trans-Canada Highway and extending west to Swift Current. Twenty-five cases have been confirmed by laboratory diagnosis in the area since last January. Most of the cases were skunks but cattle, swine, dogs and cats have also been affected.

Rabies is a virus disease of all warm blooded animals, including man. It is spread by the bite of an infected animal and wildlife appears to be the main source of infection.

Dr. J. G. O'Donoghue, Director of the Alberta Veterinary Services Branch, points out that if the disease should spread to Alberta, it is important that it be recognized immediately and the appropriate action taken.

In this connection, special attention has been given to southeastern Alberta during the last 12 months. Container depots for collecting and shipping suspected specimens have been established at several points. Pest Control officers engaged in rat control, officers from the Department of Lands and Forests, health personnel, federal veterinarians and veterinary practitioners, municipal officials and farmers are all on the alert for any evidence of the disease.

In the last year, 38 specimens have been submitted to the Federal Animals Disease Research Laboratory in Lethbridge for examination. According to Dr. O'Donoghue, the specimens submitted included dogs, cats, skunks, bats, coyotes, rabbits, a badger and a mouse, were all negative.—Alberta Wheat Pool Budget

Sedgewick Rink Wins Fridge Spiel Fifth Time

Three local Rinks made it to the finals of the seventeenth annual Viking Fridge Spiel with two of them playing off in the final game.

George Anderson and his rink were the big winners edgeing out the Lloyd Tanton foursome in a close final game by a score of nine to eight, to win the top prize of four Sherwoo Combinations. The Tanton rink received Polaroid Cameras for the second prize. Both of these rinks are from Sedgewick.

The bonspiel started out with thirty-two rinks playing for the eight qualifing spots in the finals. Two rinks including G. Hilker of Killam qualified from the first event. Two rinks including the Tanton rink from Sedgewick came though the second event and four rinks which included the Anderson foursome from Sedgewick qualified from the third events.

Playing on the wining Anderson rink were Clyds Clark at third, Ralph Shaklton at Second, and Mike Smith at lead.

Skip Ron Tanton had his brother Lloyd at third, N. Gibb at Second, and N. Bergeson at lead.

A large contingent of local curling fans drove to Viking to watch the two local rinks fight it out in the final for the top prize and both rinks curled real well, putting on a good exhibition for the spectators.

In the 17 year history of the Viking Frig Spiel, the top prizes have been won by Sedgewick rinks five times.

Three times by Bill Rose, once by Bert Cumberland, and now by George Anderson.

Canada At The Top!

There are many people in Canada today who have yet to come to the realization that their country stands at the top in the world community of nations in many categories. Just the other day we were informed that Canadians are the talkiest people there are, phone wise. This was revealed by the fact that we make more telephone calls per capita than anyone else. This may not be something to be proud of for it might simply indicate that we are just the biggest gossipers. But in any case it's a first. As a nation of people we are also one of the biggest grumblers, not withstanding the fact that we really haven't too much to grouse about. We have as many freedoms, if not many more, than people of other lands. Our big failure is that we don't realize it. Maybe you are hard to convince, but let's enumerate a few of them and see if you don't agree. We have the freedom to start our own business and run it pretty well as we please; freedom to choose our own occupation; we can buy better products at lower prices; we have a higher standard of living; the freedom to change our job if we're not satisfied; freedom to buy where we wish, with a wider variety of products. What is probably more important we have the freedom to live under the rule of the profit incentive, an institution which has yet to be proven less capable of bringing out the highest standard of initiative in the company and the individual. Canada has a lot of firsts and stands at the top in many categories. For this we should be grateful, and spend less time castigating the things where we stand in second place or lower. We can't have everything, but Canada has more than its share of the best things. What is needed most is people who realize this and will work toward maintaining them.

Sharing Should Be Sensible!

Sharing with others is a human attribute which should receive nothing but commendation, for it is one of the laws of human behavior which has existed since man became an intelligent animal of the universe. Besides this the practice is one of the cardinal virtues so necessary for the continued existence and survival of the human race. But nontheless there comes a time when sharing must be cut off, so to speak, for failure to do so can create a situation where the giver suffers and the receiver prospers. Alberta is now facing just such a problem. This province is one of the favored in Canada in the water situation, which is becoming a problem of no small magnitude for other areas here and in the country of our neighbors to the south, many of which are putting out feelers in an endeavor to get a share program under way. Alberta is fortunate in having many natural water sheds, and a program of reforestration which is paying huge dividends. At present we have ample supplies of water, but with the fast expanding economy and the tremendous growth of industry, the demand on the water supply is increasing at an alarming rate. Along with this we are beginning to feel the result of pollution which, if not checked, could reach proportions bordering on disaster. The North America Water and Power Alliance is promoting a continental water sharing scheme which should be carefully looked at by the province before any commitment is made. Our water reserves are not unlimited, and its irresponsible use is growing at a tremendous rate. Without sensible control Alberta could find itself with a water shortage. Sharing is fine as long as it doesn't go to the extent where your own shortage makes you also a liability.

Apathy, The Great Enemy!

Down through the ages man has been getting what he asks for, or perhaps we should say what he doesn't ask for. It is an absolute truism that most times people will get what they ask for if they're persistent enough. This is particularly true in the realm of public affairs. The old saw that the squeeky wheel gets the grease still holds true. On the other hand the wheel that never lets out a peep is neglected until a state of seizure sets in. So it is too in the realm of human relations.

The time is fast approaching for annual meetings of schools, municipalities, towns and villages. The time when the affairs which should concern all responsible citizens, are discussed, past activities reviewed and future policies set. It is here at these meetings that the man on the street has the opportunity to assist in policy making and set a progressive trend for the future. It is here where the wrongs of the past can be brought to light and encouragement given to steer a better course. It is even the place where a "beef" can be aired. It is the place where everybody belongs. A place where everybody is needed. We still have little time for those who set policies in coffee shops. Apathy in these matters is one of our greatest personal enemies.

A number of local hockey experts along Highway 13 are engaged in a heated argument over how long Norm Ulman of the Detroit Red Wings has been playing in the N.H.L. Everyone recalls that he played with the Edmonton Oil Kings, and was with the Flyers for a couple of seasons. The guesses are running all the way from 7 to 11 years. What's your guess? When one of the experts shows me the concrete evidence, I'll pass it along to you.

We say thank you to them Many hockey fans, more especially around Hatchet, will remember Jim for many years of fine hockey he played in the district.

Talking about arguments, most people don't care to remember too much about the depression years, but the days of fellowship at Killam are recalling the year when the government gave away dried fish, canned Herring, dried beans and apples. The argument is over what year this happened and who was the Prime Minister of Canada at the time. I don't know. I was still wearing scattered pants at the time, but there must be many people who can recall the answers.

LEADERS LOOK AT 1966

What's ahead for business this year? More than 120 top executives from coast to coast make their personal forecasts in The Financial Post this week. Their views are of great importance to all businessmen and of special interest to discerning investors. Consensus: The general level of business activity should continue buoyant in 1966. There will likely be some inflationary pressure which would have an influence on profits, since costs are continuing to creep higher. The high level of capital spending should continue. Most executives think the boom will continue to roll. —St. Paul Journal

THE SPIRIT OF THE PAST

When one reads the results of some of the public meetings held near the close of this 20th century, he is forced to ask himself what has become of the independent spirit of the past that prompted the pioneers to make Canada one of the world's leading countries in so short a space of time. It seems fair to say that the spirit of the past has departed.

Minority and ethnic groups everywhere are now asking government to pass laws to preserve their culture. The royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism is being asked to request governments to help finance the fostering of the culture of minorities. The governments are being asked to pass laws to protect them from being integrated into the larger and newer culture of a truly great land.

In times past people looked after themselves. If they wanted to be different they did it on their own. This made them truly great and gave them the stamina and initiative necessary to be a distinct people. Now, not only do they want to avoid integrating in the country where they make their living, they ask the government of that land to provide financial assistance with which to do it.—Nanton News.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Crime College New Weapon

OTTAWA — The long slimy tentacles of the Mafia are reaching into Canada from the United States.

The leaders seldom conform to the usual concept of the common criminal. Many pose and are accepted as members of the business world, or as members of reputable professional fields. Many have never been charged with a criminal offence.

The authority for these startling disclosures, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The famed Canadian force presented background papers to the Federal Provincial conference on organized crime in Ottawa early in January. These disclosures were made public the day after the conference was completed.

Commissioner George B. McClellan of the RCMP warned the conference that the record in the U. S. indicated that if Canada does not take strong measures now to prevent the growth of organized crime, it may be too late to do so once it becomes well embedded in our country".

American law enforcement officials agreed, he said, "that a few million dollars spent on better prevention a number of years ago might have saved them the multi-billion dollar crime bill they pay today".

One RCMP background paper said the expansion of organized crime in Canada began during the early 1920 period. Its main base of operations was in Montreal. This Mafia or Cosa Nostra organization was beaten back, but there were signs that since that time there has been a very steady increase in the development of organized crime a nd groups.

From Canada these groups maintain a close working relationship and personal tie with many U.S. based syndicates. It is significant that many of the U.S. groups have been recently labelled as "Mafia" by the U.S. senate and sub-Committee on organized crime.

The Canadian groups also maintain connections with criminal elements in southern Italy and Sicily, which the Italian authorities call "Mafiosas", and with criminals in other urban areas of Canada where the commercial development and high population density offers potentially fertile grounds for development of lucrative crime, said the RCMP. Their criminal activities fluctuate into nearly all fields of crime. They are active in such operations as extortion rackets, land frauds, gambling, labour racketeering, narcotics, counterfeiting, bankruptcy fraud, illicit liquor, arms, fraud, business manipulation and other forms of racketeering.

These groups have developed as efficient and well organized administrative system. Their organization has the directors, the administrators (often called Professionals) and the labourers, or the common criminals. The leaders pose behind pseudo-legitimate business fronts, such as construction firms, meat markets, real estate, export-import businesses steel brokerages, labour consultants, law firms and so on. These men evoke an air of respectability, they reside in the best neighborhoods, they contribute to churches and charity, live quietly and are affable to the general public. The internal organization of the group allows the leader to operate behind several layers of insulation in the form of his subordinates.

The directives of the leader are transmitted to the footmen. They carry them into action through the labour segment. Thus the leader seldom actively participates in commission of an overt crime. He is seldom connected to an offence, or even suspected of operating behind the scenes. His purpose is to supply the brains and administration of the syndicate while his subordinates provide the brawn and muscle.

In order to combat this new super deluxe type of criminal organization the police forces in Canada have got to modernize and streamline their operations. The Federal Provincial conference was summoned in order to launch an intensified, co-operative war against the new type of organized criminal. A central intelligence crime bureau, which may be labelled interpror, is expected to be established.

Solicitor General Lawrence Pennell told the delegates that the Federal Government will spend $18,000,000 over the next five years to more modern RCMP facilities and training. A $4,-310,000 Canadian bilingual police college will be established at Ottawa to give specialized training for Federal, Provincial and Municipal police personnel.

There will be expanded telecommunications and wirephoto facilities to cost $1,000,000 and $500,000 annual maintenance. There will be more emphasis on bilingualism in the RCMP's data processing systems and closer co-operation with the Immigration Dept. to keep out undesirable aliens. There is to be greater co-operation on the increasing problem of fraudulent bankruptcies.

The provincial attorneys-general generally favored retention of the death penalty. The conference rejected a Quebec suggestion of a national referendum on abolition of the death penalty which legislation is to be decided by a free vote in the Commons at this session.

The Conference not the stage for several criminal code amendments at the new session. The Justice Dept. at Ottawa and the other Federal Departments concerned will give clean study in the suggested amendments.

Probably one of the most potent weapons to fight the new organized and sophisticated criminal activity will be the police college. It will be an expansion of the RCMP school at Ottawa, and will be administered by that force.

The curriculum is expected to include a variety of subjects as: major criminal conspiracies, fraudulent financial transactions under the Criminal Code, collection and dissemination of criminal intelligence information, income tax law, auditing and accounting procedures, business practices, stock frauds, bankruptcy legislation, gaming legislation, arson investigations, burglary and safe-blowing investigation, collection and protection & assessment of evidence, information sources and interrogation, and advanced Criminal Code instruction.

The college would be open to all police forces in Canada who may apply for their experience, educational qualifications and ability, to qualify. Commissioner McClellan said he could think of no single progressive step in police work in this country that would do more to raise and to standardize the levels of police efficiency and training nationwi. ly.

Prime Minister Pearson is keenly interested in speeding up and making much more efficient the war on organized crime in Canada.

Items Taken From The Files Of The Community Press

20 YEARS AGO

Sunday night the Lougheed Elevator Agents met defeat at the hands of the Carnegie Pretty in a curling match. Score 11 — 4. The lineup was: Marvelubs Barthel, Gun Grease Riddell, Head Oil Frost, and Used Oil Reibre for the garage. Wild Oats McLeod, Pig Wood Shorgren, Stink Weed Keeny, and Stout Ball Peterson for the Grain Agents.

Dayaland still leads the league in total points while Hardisty clings stubbornly to the second rung. Sedgwick has moved up into third place with Killam in fourth. Strome has jumped from the cellar into fifth position, vacating that spot to the so far luckless club from Lougheed.

W. W. Rose and his rink from Sedgwick won first prize in the Merchants event at the Daylaind Bonspiel last week while the Butt rink took second in the same event.

10 YEARS AGO

Dayaland by virtue of their 9 — 3 win over Alliance have taken over sole league leadership in the tight race for top honors. Hanrahan scored four times and Gillespie three for most of the Dayaland points.

In an exciting hockey game last Monday evening the Hardisty Flyers administered a drubbing to the old-timers. The score seems a little vague, but everyone agreed that Cmdr. Kirk scored the one count for the old-timers.

The Willow Hollow Group held their annual meeting and elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Bill Larson, Sec. Mrs. Dave Anderson, Treas. Mrs. R. Grant, and Hon. Sewing, Mrs. O. Larson.

Ibarian tabulations following the FUA's membership drive show a total sign-up of 28,973 members representing 19,980 farm units.

this country. It was the Prime Minister who first placed the item on the Federal-Provincial conference held earlier this year. And it was out of the discussions with the premiers of the provinces at that conference that the decision came to call a special conference dedicated to combatting the growth of crime in Canada. The government is set out to break up the syndicates before they become too well established and much more difficult to eradicate.

Meteor's rich look of luxury is one big reason

Meteor's elegant comfort is another reason

One of the first things people notice in a new Meteor is the beautiful interior luxury. Once you've seen Meteor's comfortable, deep, foam-padded seats, there's no stopping you from sitting in them and surrounding yourself in Meteor elegance. Fabrics are rich, lavish. Soft, supple crinkle grain vinyl has the look and feel of fine leather. A number of people joined the Meteor Admiration Society the moment they discovered and experienced all this elegance and prestige in a popular price car.

Meteor's beautiful style is another reason

Your eyes just naturally snap to attention at the first sight of a new Meteor. You simply cannot resist Meteor's distinctive beauty . . . clean, crisp, sculptured lines and tasteful use of trim accents. Meteor's sweeping roofline and gently tapered rear deck draw admiring looks wherever they're seen. EMO To Hold A Single Municipal Conference

The Alberta Emergency Measures Organization will hold a single Municipal Conference January 27 and 28, at Red Deer, in place of the dual event held in Edmonton and repeated in Calgary, in previous years.

Advantage of single conference is that it will allow Mayors, or other elected representatives and EMO Co-ordinators, from all 256 Alberta municipalities organizing for Emergency Measures, to meet and exchange their views on past and future planning.

Following a welcome by Mayor R. E Barrett of Red Deer, and an Opening Address by Hon. L. C. Halmrast, Minister responsible for Alberta EMO, C. R. Patterson, of Ottawa, who replaced Paul Fagny as Director General, Canada EMO, last year, will speak on National Developments in the Emergency Measures Program

The conference agenda has been streamlined to allow shorter presentations by the many agencies concerned with emergency planning, and to permit discussion by delegates. The program will be enlivened by a half hour playlet and a demonstration of the operation of a Unit Emergency Government Headquarters, performed by Alberta EMO Staff officers.

Exhibits arranged by Emergency Health Services, Emergency Welfare Services and the Emergency Measures Organization will be on display throughout the day conference, and a banquet will be featured on the evening of the opening day.

Conference Chairman will be Co-ordinator, Alberta EMO, Arnold J. Lavoie.

Touring Correspondents Find N. Z. Government Monopoly

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

We are now on a ferry heading back to the North Island. The trip goes direct to Wellington from Christchurch, takes seven hours and is one of the most antiquated ships we have ever seen. The trip costs $40.80 for us and the car, which is highway robbery. However you only have three choices and the government controls them all.

Since Christmas we have been touring the East Coast which is quite flat and dry. This is the crop growing area of the country. Wheat of the white winter type, is just about ready for swathing, while oats are beginning to turn color. The average size of a field is thirty acres, but very few fields are paddocks to sixty acre fields. Rapeseed is grown extensively here but all of the dwarf variety and is used for fattening pasture for lambs. Turnips are also grown in large fields in the winter the Ewes and Haggets (year old lambs) are turned in Sirlins one as a very efficient way of doing work and eliminates a lot of handling.

The weather has been very indifferent for the past three weeks being dull and overcast most of the time Some days are very windy with scattered showers. New Year Day was warm (80 above) so we did like the natives do and headed for the beach. Found a nice black sand beach some 102 miles South of Christchurch where the surf was coming in. Spent an enjoyable day bathing for sea shells and body surf-riding to cool off. It was interesting to note that we were sitting down to supper on New Year's Day as you were celebrating New Year's Eve. Hope you had a good time, as we spent a very quiet evening. Boats made a great noise at midnight and trains hooted, but there were no dances or public functions.

While in Christchurch we met another Canadian couple (from Edmonton) who are returning after being here only three months, instead of the three years they originally planned. Their reason for leaving we gathered was being unable to find a decent place to live without building a new house. Apartments are very scarce, although one does see an occasional block of them. It is unfortunate as Christchurch is a lovely city and has very effectively used their Avon River for parklands. The University is situated on the river also, and canoes float up and down its many curves Other cities all have their parks and rose gardens, but Christchurch is by far the nicest. We only wish the city farthers of Edmonton would take a good long look at what can be done with a little effort, with their natural resources

We still have two weeks left here in New Zealand before we sail on to Australia from Auckland.

To those who have written us without a reply, we must say that it is because we have not picked up our mail for five weeks. We are both starting to get a little travel weary, but the thought of avoiding the winter snow always cheers us up. We hope that things farcast are wrong and that you are having a good year —George and Beverly Davison.

Baptists Hold Annual Fellowship Supper

The purpose of publishing the Baptist Church news is to provide information of our activities to those of our number who have moved from this community, and for those who are unable to attend because of sickness and old age.

We have enjoyed being able to correspond with you this past year and we look forward to coming into your home, through this medium, in 1966. We trust that this column will be of spiritual blessing to you.

The annual meeting of the Women' Missionary Society was held on Thursday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Heartberg. Sixteen ladies answered the roll call with the name of a favorite hymn. A devotion was reserved to go to the Engstrom sisters who have been home on furlough from Mexico. The missionary biography of Rev. and Mrs. Gilbert Anderson, missionaries in Chiapis, was read by Mrs. Louise Wylie Mrs. E. Wylie read the scripture and led in a time of prayer. A solo by Mrs. Louise Wylie was enjoyed. A motion was carried that the books belonging to the W.M.S. be turned in to the church library It was decided to have the books in a separate room, and to create greater enthusiasm a book review will be presented each month by a member of the W.M.S. The meeting for the preparation of the week of prayer for this year will be held on Thursday, January 20. Election of officers took place and resulted as follows: President, Dorothy Heartberg; Vice-President, Loretta Danielson; Secretary, Caroline Wolff; Assistant Secretary, Signe York; Treasurer, Edith Bartsmeli; Courtesy Convener, Bertie Coyes, Misc. Fund Treas., Freda Scott; Pianist, Hazel Sorensen; Assistant Pianist, Joanne White; Reading Chairman, Merle Cyr; Spiritual Life Chairman, Janice Freadrich.

Lunch was served by the hostesses.

The annual Fellowship Supper was held on Friday night with many in attendance. Following the supper the booklets, comprising the annual reports for 1965, were distributed The vice-chairman led in a brief session of reviewing the booklet. A verbal donation report was given, and also a report from the representative to the British and Foreign Bible Society. The total missionary giving for 1965 was $3,369.22.

Rev. Willard Siple, of Wetaskiwin, has agreed to serve as the interim pastor until the position of a pastor has been filled.

Gasoline Prices

A Letter Writer to the Vancouver Sun says that if the oil companies were nationalized, the price of gasoline and oil could be reduced by about half of what the public now pays. There is competition in the gasoline business and if there were that much profit in it there would be a substantial reduction in prices.

CENTRAL HIGH BASKETBALL NEWS

SEDGEWICK— On January 13th the Sedgewick Junior High School girls played their last league basketball game when they played host to the Junior High team from Galahad.

The first quarter was fast with little scoring and ended with Galahad leading 8 to 4. The game was even faster in the second quarter, and at half time Galahad still maintained a lead of 16 to 12. The third quarter found Galahad still leading 18 to 16.

The low-scoring third quarter produced some real good team effort by both clubs, with close checking, which produced the final game score of 21 to 18 in favor of Galahad.

The boys game which followed immediately opened with a fine display of the game, with Sedgewick taking the lead in the first quarter, and Galahad coming back in the second to end the half leading 26 to 21.

The second half witnessed fast basketball and accurate shooting to leave the Sedgewick team the victors by a one point margin.

The Sedgewick girls will be represented on the W.M.S. be turned in to the church library It was decided to have the books belonging to the W.M.S. be turned in to the church library It was decided to have the books in a separate room, and to create greater enthusiasm a book review will be presented each month by a member of the W.M.S. MEMORY LANE

OUT-MODED METHODS

Modern medicines to-day are making such amazing strides—it is impossible to keep abreast of them. Drugs that save lives to-day—were un-heard of only a few years ago. Anesthesia for modern surgery was first used in the year 1846—with the first painless operation under ether —just a little over one hundred years ago.

Yes, we are thankful that we live in this day and age when pain can be alleviated so effectively—where a sick spell can be shortened to hours compared to days—a few years ago. Yet, we can re-call that in the early days there were times when the so-called "Old-fashioned" methods of treating accidents were most effective.

One such incident comes to my mind—it happened right in our own home We lived eight miles from town on the old home-stead of the time. The baby—a girl of a little over one year — had contracted quite pneumonia. It was in early spring—March—I believe. The roads at that time of year are almost impassable—especially the side trails. Therefore, having the Doctor come out from town really posed quite a problem. But when we convinced him that it was most imperative that he come—as the baby was steadily growing worse—he agreed to come as far as "The Four Corners"—one of my Husband would him with a team and wagon as the Dr's old Model "T" couldn't make it from there to our place.

By the time he arrived, the baby was running a temperature of 105 degrees—and it was alarmingly difficult for her to breathe. Of course, at that time there were no known drugs to coax pain—nor to shorten the duration of that dreaded sickness — pneumonia. THEN pneumonia was supposed to run for nine days—then, on ninth night of the ninth day there would be a change—for better or worse—IF!!! Then the change would take place at that time—or such was the belief.

And so—especially a wee baby running such a high temperature for that long a time, their strength would have ebbed away to the point of almost being beyond recovery. if not entirely.

When the Dr. had come out he had brought some "Thermogene" with him and ordered a plaster of it put on her chest and one behind her shoulder blades. He then informed us that on account of the condition of the roads he wouldn't be out again UNTIL AFTER THE NINETH DAY. We knew he held out no hopes whatever for our wee girl to pull through.

After he left—and of our neighbors who had come—as she always did whenever we needed her in times of need and sickness—asked "Do you think the Dr. has given up all hope?" "I'm afraid so", we answered. "Then" said this friend, "May I take over"? (She had eight children of her own, so had a great deal of experience in sickness) So we readily agreed to give over the case entirely to her capable hands as we knew she was thoroughly competent.

"Have you a good—sized piece of fat pork and a raw onion"? she asked. When we said we had both—she said, "Put both through the food chopper. I will make a couple poultices." She spread this concoction on two pieces of brown wrapping paper—first cutting the paper to fit snug up on the baby's neck, as, she informed us—children do not have pneumonia on the lungs as much as higher up.

By that time our wee girl could not get her breath at all, lying down —she had to be held up against our shoulder all the time. However, these poultices of pork-fat and onion were put in place—it was around seven or eight in the evening. The boys slowly went to—the three of us—myself, Hubby and the neighbor kept a constant watch for any change. There wasn't a sound in the room but the baby's labored breathing—the ticking of the alarm clock and, now and again the crackling of the wood in the stove.

Suddenly—it seemed that all three of us noticed at the same time that the baby's breathing seemed a bit easier. Daylight came—the Sun was just peeping up over the horizon, and, by then, there was a decided difference—even her wee body didn't seem to be so hot in our arms.

It was between nine and ten that morning that our baby's breathing showed normal—her temperature was dropping—and she was having her first peaceful sleep in days. Just as we had finished changing the poultices—around noon—the Dr.—who had been called to a neighbor's sick-bed, dropped in! The fumes from those poultices on the baby's and covered body still hung in the air. The Dr. sniffed— then turned to me, saying, "Remove whatever it is you have on the child so I can examine her".

After what seemed to us an unreasonably long time, listening to the baby's lungs through his stethoscope, he straightened up, and replacing his stethescope in his little black bag, he remarked, "The baby's lungs are as clear as a bell. Surely, Higher Power must have undertaken here", and he went from the room He told my Husband, later, that he fully expected to pronounce the baby dead when he came.

We looked at the sleeping baby, then at our friend, and, with tears streaming down our face, we said, "Higher Power DID undertake, we know. But we know when we had on hand, too. These pork and onion poultices did help, too".

It that had been NOW—the baby would have been given injections of penicillen and in a day or so would have been well on the road to recovery—if not completely well. However, as penicillen was unheard of then—fat pork and onion poultices sufficed.

You—modern medicines and drugs are truly a God—send, and we, as a Nation owe you a debt of gratitude to the fact that millions of lives have been spared—that other-wise un-doubtedly have perished.

But we can not—we MUST not do-mean our earlier remedies either.

DO YOU KNOW!

THAT—under the situation as it exists today, too often it is the supply of money that governs how, rather than the availability of goods and services, that limits the standards of living that people can obtain and enjoy.

THAT— Social Credit says the standard of living of the people of a country should be limited only by the extent of their physical resources, the capacity of their industry to produce goods from those resources, the extent of their technical skill and know how, and their willingness to apply themselves to produce the things that they desire, both in the field of goods and the field of services.

Lars Soethen says that when you get ahold of something, hang on tight. He and Jim McClements use their Ski-Doos to run their traplines, and apparently have lot of fun doing it. But the other day Jim lost the front end of his machine and the Mounted Police kept right on until he got his coyote. When Lars caught up to his animal, he grabbed it by the tail and hung on for dear life. Didn't Jim arrived to help out. The moral? It pays to hang on.

Lars Soethen says that when you get ahold of something, hang on tight. He and Jim McClements use their Ski-Doos to run their traplines, and apparently have lot of fun doing it. But the other day Jim lost the front end of his machine and the Mounted Police kept right on until he got his coyote. When Lars caught up to his animal, he grabbed it by the tail and hung on for dear life. Didn't Jim arrived to help out. The moral? It pays to hang on.

Edith Beverley Forster Wed At Killam

KILLAM—A lovely wedding was solemnized at 2:30 p.m. Dec. 18, 1965 in Knox United Church, Killam when Edith Beverley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Forster of Killam, became the bride of Mr. Hugh Stanley Dalgleish Boyles, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Boyles of Beauriesmage, Quebec.

The altar was decorated with bouquets of yellow and white mums and tall white tapers in silver candelabra. The church pews were marked with white and yellow mumsays.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father to the strains of the beautiful hymn "Praise My Soul O King of Heaven". The wedding party stood before the altar while the soloist, Mrs. W. Forster sang of the bride sang "The Wedding Prayer", accompanied by Mrs. Herb Wilson at the organ.

Reverend Foley Peterson conducted the double ring ceremony. The bride and groom knelt for the first benediction.

During the signing of the register Mrs. W. Forster sang "I'll Walk Beside You".

The bride was dressed in a floor length sheath gown of peau-de-soi trimmed with lace. Her matching train fell from a bow that adorned the empire waistline. A flower headpiece held the filmy, elbow-length veil in place. She carried a crescent bouquet of pink roses and lily of the valley and her grandmother's lace wedding hanky.

The matron-of-honor, Mrs. Shirley Fossen and the junior bridesmaid, Miss Patty Forster, sisters of the bride, wore identical floor length sheath gowns of turquoise peau-de-soi with matching shoes and headpieces They carried bouquets of carnations.

The mother of the bride wore a pink Italian knit suit with black accessories. Her corsage was of pink roses.

The groom's mother was dressed in a coral Italian double knit suit with black accessories. She wore a pink rose corsage

The groom was attended by Mr. Brian Harper of Edmonton and Mr. Donald Forster.

The ushers were Mr. Douglas and Mr Donald Forster Immediately after the ceremony a reception was held in the United Church Hall which had been tastefully decorated by "Auntie" Mary Murray.

Miss Myrna Schweizer was in charge of the guest book.

Mr. Wilbert Bevington was master of ceremonies. He called Mr. E. H. Forster, the brides' grandfather to say grace.

The toast to the bride was given by Mr. W. Forster and was ably responded to by the groom. Mr. Brian Harper proposed the toast to the bridesmaids. He also introduced the guests at the head table.

Telegrams were read from Quebec, Toronto, Edmonton and Braborne B.C.

Mr. Boyles Sr. spoke a few words on behalf of the young people. Rev. Peterson added to the joy of the occasion with a few well chosen comments.

The wedding cake was cut with an engraved silver knife, a gift to the bride and groom. Donald Forster played a piano solo "Before You Came" as the bride and groom served cake to their guests.

Mr. Bevington read a fitting poem to bring the afternoon's festivities to a close.

Out of town guests were from Beauriesmage, Quebec, Calgary, Prohibier Bay N.W.T., Edmonton, Camrose, Forestberg, Midnapore, Lougheed, Sedgewick, Lamont, Alliance and Saskatoon.

40 Below Can't Stop Burns Fans

The farmers arranged a Bobby Burns Night, In the local Community Hall;
Entertainers were there in costumes bright, A-asking their call to take the spotlight;
When out of the night which was forty below, And into the brightly-lit hall,
There came the people from high and low To prove they could take it after all.

While that may not be very good poetry, it does about sum up the feelings of the committee in charge of the Burns Night, who had almost disguised of getting a crowd in turn out. Finding themselves in the position of being unable to call the affair off, they were more than pleased with the turn-out on a really cold evening. The large hall with a capacity of 500 people, was well over three-quarters full by the time the show got under way.

Jointly M. C'd. by Tommy Bruce and James Hallum, the two hour show was pleasing to the attentive audience, and featured the singing of Mrs. Crystal (MacDonald) Fluette. Mrs. Flutte is no stranger to local audiences, having sung here on previous occasions, and her range of songs were well received.

Piper David Saul entertained with selections on the pipes, and also played for the young dancers, pupils of Miss Muir. These young dancers were meticulously true to form, especially in the intricate sword.

Jack Wallis of Edmonton, dressed in traditional kilts, charmed the crowd with an appropriate vocal solo.

Added numbers to the program were given by local talent, to fill out a well-rounded-out program. Ken and Russell Grant of Killam sang two vocal duets, with Rev Perry at the piano; Mr. and Mrs. Bob Jacobson, entertained with duets in their usual pleasing manner, with Mrs. Art Edwards at the piano. A local quartet of male voices from Sedgewick rendered two numbers, accompanied by Mrs. Ed Swards, and the School Chorus under the directions of Trevor Chapman, and featuring the solo voice of Ronald Routledge, performed admirably with several selections.

The address to the Immortal Bard was given by A. W. Eastly, and featured a portion of Burns' Epistle to J. Labrak.

A special and unrehearsed part of the program, was the reminiscences of J. L. "Jock" Muirhead, recalling the first Burns Program he had attended in Lea Park, approximately fifty years ago. John pleased the crowd with a couple Scotch songs, in a voice which had lost little of its former youthful charm.

Following the program, lunch was served, and the evening concluded with a dance to music by the Elmhurst Rhythmaires.

FIRST BABY BOY —Brent Melvin Nielsen, fourth son of Mr. and Mrs. Leander Nielsen of Metiskow, was the first boy born in the Killam Hospital in 1966 Brent was born at 3:40 a.m. on January 12th and weighed in at 8 pounds, 3 ounces. Dr. D. Patel was the attending physician. Brent has three older brothers, Joseph, Grant, and Lloyd.

M.D. Council Studies '66 Road Program

SEDGEWICK — The adjourned council meeting of January 3rd, was held in the board room at the municipal office on January 12th, with all councillors and the secretary in attendance. The minutes were read and accepted, as well as the financial statement for December 1965.

A letter from the Galahad-Pleasington Local of the Farmers' Union advised the council that a meeting of the Local was being held, and invited the council and secretary to attend. It was agreed that as many as possible would attend.

Engineers from the Dept. of Highways and Mr. Graham, Flagstaff road foreman were at the meeting, and the District Engineers report on the 1965 road work was read and some points that the engineers' presentations were explained. Proposed work on a contingency road near Galahad was discussed.

The engineers were questioned about the 1966 road work program. In view of the road studies program being set across the province. Engineers advised that it was too early to tell what the results of the study would be, but indicated that they felt that the contingent road and the resources road should be constructed with a 32 foot road and a 122 foot right of way

Following adjournment for lunch, the account and pay sheets as read were approved for payment.

The Provincial Deputy Fire Commissioner met with the council and discussed with them the problems connected with the supplying of fire fighting equipment to give some protection in rural areas. He informed the council that his department was prepared to make a survey of the district and make suggestions in respect to fire fighting equipment for the area, taking into account the equipment already owned and operated by the towns and villages The council replied that they would welcome such a report, and that they would appreciate receiving it fairly soon so that it could be considered before the annual meeting.

In response to a request from council, Mr. Attwood of Alberta Telephones met with council to discuss and explain the proposed hired rural distribution system that Lougheed slated for this year. Mr Attwood conceded that mistakes had been made in the program in 1965 but felt this was to be expected in a program of this magnitude. The new policy for 1966 would correct

Sub-Zero Temperatures Stay As Weatherman Persists

ALBERTA—If nothing else favorable may be said about the weather man, he can certainly be accused of being persistent When he decides to visit the area with cold weather, he goes all out to do a first-class job of it

For the past two weeks or better the area served by this newspaper has suffered though 20 to 45 degree below temperatures, with some chilling winds thrown in for good measure There has been some expectation with night snowfall, but for the most part it has just been simply cold.

Those who found it necessary to travel in cars and trucks have been bumping along on square tires, of being persistent When he decides to visit the area with cold weather, he goes all out to do a first-class job of it

For the past two weeks or better the area served by this newspaper has suffered though 20 to 45 degree below temperatures, with some chilling winds thrown in for good measure There has been some expectation with night snowfall, but for the most part it has just been simply cold.

Those who found it necessary to travel in cars and trucks have been bumping along on square tires, frozen up heating systems and coughing motors Stock feeders are finding their supplies of feed diminishing rapidly, and water pumping systems causing no end of difficulties

The present outlook is more of the same, and almost all we can hope for is that those so-called cold and hot areas will get together and come up with a trough that will produce something warmer

Mackenzie Elliott Night At Hardisty H. & S.

HARDISTY — It was "MacKenzie Elliott" Night, there are no two ways about it, when this man, native of Sussex, England, who studied Theology with a view to entering the Ministry, and now serves as personnel councillor on the staff of the Camrose School, spoke at the Home and School at Hardisty, Monday, January 17th

It was night because the enlightenment, knowledge and guidance which he brought to this adult education group, are a promise of a more useful and fuller life for many of the youth of the area. "Children of farmers" stated Mr Elliott "are forced more and more to seek employment in the larger centres of population " Vocational guiders are perplexed to know exactly what to suggest a pupil should train for in our society where 20,000 occupations are listed. Cybernation has added its threat to the labor forces Briefly, Cybernation is a combination of automation and computers.

As an example, in a large biscuit factory, computers sort the orders and sets them up for delivery Other devices or machines control and report the temperature and indicate when the product is ready to be packaged. A shortened work week and a rising standard of living are most likely.

Turning most of his attention to his own specialty of personnel councelling, Mr. Elliott, B.A., B.-Ed., B. Paid., revealed that about 30 percent of students have emotional problems, of whom up to 5 percent are in need of existative therapy A counsellor is able to help many students choose a vocation which is most satisfying to them This applies to some of the brilliant students who wonder what to do with their talents, and to the ones with fewer talents who wonder if there is a rewarding vocation open to them.

Camrose School can accep 18 as its Vocational School. This training usually begins in Grade 11 Altho' a farm youth, who does not care for the academic course, might be accepted even in grade 9

Girl pupils can become fully-trained for a business career where there is a great demand for stenographers.

The Killam School Division provides a grant of from $1.75 to $2 per day. The student pays $25 tuition

Parents and pupils who are interested can have an interview with Mr Elliott on a Saturday morning at his office in Camrose school.

New members joined at the close of the Home and School meeting, which was chaired by President, Mr. Robert S. Wood.

Talking Canadians!

While we would find it hard to lose our faith altogether, we do not find it too difficult to become disheartened and disappointed in the activities of Canadians as a people. Apparently not a few citizens were somewhat disturbed over the revelation made in these columns recently that we do not have the standard of education we thought we had, and that our young people are failing to remain in school and get the training our neighbors to the south are getting. This is one of the areas where Canada does not stand first, and it is to our detriment that such a situation exists. But this is not the only area in which we fail to stand at the top. In fact, in the field of patriotism we almost flunk out altogether.

An American told us not long ago that Canadians do not talk enough. He's wrong in a sense, for we do talk aplenty. We criticise and we belittle, we haggle and we hedge, we blame and we grumble, we grouch and we berate. We do our share of talking alright, but instead of finding something constructive to exercise our vocal cords with, we knock and we slam our province and nation, until we ourselves come to believe what we are saying. The province of Alberta and the Canadian nation are paradises beyond the imagination of thousands who live in less fortunate parts of the world. Many would dearly love to make Canada their home, and if able to do so would find this land the answer to their yearnings for peace, and comfort and liberty to pursue their living and their happiness. Yet we who have the privilege to enjoy all this, waste our energy in acclaiming the deficiencies of our nation. We're not a proud people, and it is to our shame that we are not. We have, and we get; we get and we want more. We get more and we grumble that it's not enough. We want governments to bail us out of every situation with economic aid and handouts.

If this is really what we want, then we should reply with a little nationalism .We should give our nation a boost at every opportunity. We should praise our land; we should sing O Canada with a zest and an enthusiasm that will echo across the world; we should fly our Canadian flag at every opportunity. We should sing the glories of a great nation. We should be proud we are Canadians.

Have You Got Coryza?

Is your nose stuffy? Do you have difficulty breathing? You do? Well we've got news for you. You may not be getting old; you may not be carrying too much poundage around the waistline. You may not even be smoking too heavily. But you've got an ailment just the same most likely. What you probably have is Coryza, that prevalent common disease that sneaks up on you and wham, you're laid low. You get chilled outside, or even inside a drafty room, then move to an overheated area and you become susceptible to Coryza, the disease which keeps handerchief makers and tissue manufacturers in business. You've got a common cold.

There is no cure for this common cold, and although it is considered as a relatively minor ailment, it causes an annual loss of millions of dollars in terms of time lost from work, wages lost, and the cost of treating the disease and its complications. Persons of all ages are susceptible to Coryza, but pre-school children appear to be more so, for the thousands upon thousands of cases in this category attest to the fact. From the cold comes the contraction of pneumonia, and from pneumonia comes death. Guard well against Coryza. If you get a code get it looked after.

A Study In Progress!

The aggressive desires and ability of the Canadian Indian have been attacked on numerous occasions. They've been derided as indolents and non-progressive, and a sort of a satisfied as we are class of people. If this be all true, the white man is to blame for such a situation in no small measure. We have herded them onto reservations and put them so much a year to stay there and leave the rest of us alone. We treat them as second-rate citizens and then expect them to respect us and live according to our standards. It just can't be done. No man can have respect for another who keeps him in subjection. But it is our belief that the Canadian Indian can and will be what we would like to have him be, if we give him the opportunity to do so. This fact was confirmed by the news that centennial grants had been approved for three Indian groups, one of which will build a $125,000 Recreational Centre and raise $123,000 of the money themselves. The other two will raise over one-third of the sums for projects within the Bands. In this respect these Indians are showing more enthusiasm for Canada's 100th birthday than are many white communities.

ABOUT MOST ANYTHING

by A.C.E.

Last week I mentioned the argument going on over North Ulman and how may years he has been playing in the N.H.L. Well a lot of you have your opinions but the greatest weight of evidence seems to say that this is his eleventh season with the Red Wings. Among others, Elgin Brown of Daysland has a book which says eleven years, and James Mallon of Sedgewick says he can prove eleven too.

Once each year the Alberta Weekly Newspapers Assn. presents a brief to the Alberta Government covering many subjects which the weekly editors feel are of importance. The most recent was presented on January 7th and brought an almost instant response from a number of local leaders, especially on the part of the brief which praised Premier Manning for his stand against the present strong trend towards socialism and compulsory intrusion into the private lives of citizens.

During the most recent of our cold weather a local old-timer saw me hurrying down the street at my fastest gallop and informed me that you should never run in cold weather. It's not good for the lungs. Made me think of the way people in the Southern U.S. and other warmer climates smile about their daily chores as though they had all day to get nowhere. If the local populace was to try it at this time of the year, it might be easier on the lungs, but everything else would freeze up from inactivity.

Curlers are a funny breed. One of the main points of the game is to display the very best sportsmen-like manners while you're really out for blood. Another quirk which curlers display is to never take any credit for the big win. Last week the Anderson Rink copped the top prize at the Fridge Spiel and when I talked to them at various times it was always the other three that were rod hot. From talking to the spectators it sounds more like all four of them did a pretty fair job.

I notice a subscription renewal coming in for Mr. and Mrs. Art Shackleton of Acme, Alta. and formerly of Stroma and Lougheed. This jogged my memory back to the days when Mrs. Muckleston was a school teacher in Sedgewick (nee Sylvia Burden) and I was in about grade six. Besides being a good teacher, Miss Burden amazed her many students with her steel nerves. How many ladies do you know that could pick a garter snake or a mouse out of a desk drawer and deposit it gently outside, without screaming once?

INDIA'S FARMING PROBLEM

The population of India has now reached about 500,000,000 and is increasing at the rate of 17,000,000 a year. Food is scarce there this year due to an under-average crop of cereals in 1965. Many, many people in that vast country will die of starvation.

Wheat is being rushed to India now by the United States, and to a lesser extent by Canada, to provide some measure of relief. But such efforts cannot be continued indefinitely. The surplus food produced by all the food exporting nations each year cannot begin to meet the requirements, not only of India, but other food-lacking countries.

If India hopes to maintain a healthy population that country will have to completely re-organize her agriculture. And that cannot be accomplished in a few years. It will take a long time for India to mechanize her farms, teach farmers the need for the lavish use of commercial fertilizers and the adoption of modern methods of farming.

It is easy to give advice. And India is a very old country with her population divided into national groups and castes and religious sects. It may take a revolution to bring about the required changes. —Brooks Bulletin.

★ MACDUFF REPORT

Only A Dream?

OTTAWA — It's almost as though the sound and fury of last year's Federal election was only a dream or an optical illusion.

The pre-election parliament is meeting again and a few shifts in seating and a few new faces. But it's still the same fractured minority House and Lucien Defenbaker still faces Lester Pearson across those few yards of green carpet.

And the program for this Parliament — at least what was contained in the Throne Speech — is the mixture as before.

This session will have to wrestle with the old problems. In the 11-page Throne Speech at the session there were 80 specific government programs or legislative measures. But there was scarcely one that hadn't been announced, discussed or even debated in Parliament before.

The big bills will be familiar ones — railway legislation, changes in the pension fact, fiscal arrangements with the provinces.

But as the session goes on it may develop that the impression of sameness is the optical illusion — that subtle but definite changes have come over the House. The only safe prediction about a session of Parliament is that there's no safe prediction. But there may be hints of things to come even in the Throne Speech which most commentators dismissed with a weary yawn.

The provinces may discover a new firmness at Ottawa. This is the big year for Federal provincial relations, when the fiscal pattern for the next five years will be set and when the nation will have to decide on Quebec's drive for "special status" within Confederation.

Prime Minister Pearson recently blasted back at the ill-conceived intervention of Quebec's Eric Kierans into foreign affairs. And this was followed in the Throne Speech by a declaration that Mr. Pearson's government is "resolved to maintain the constitutional responsibilities of the Federal Government".

There may be a new turn in economic policy too. Walter Gordon is gone from the Cabinet although he still sits on the front bench. And the bank act revision he drafted, for one, has gone back to the drawing boards for review by the new Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp. It is thought that Mr. Sharp will be more likely to lift the six per cent ceiling on bank loan rates, a step Mr. Gordon refused to take last year.

The railway act which faced the last parliament will be modified as well, perhaps meeting the near-unanimous objections of Western Canada.

On the government side, three former Ministers — Messrs. Gordon, Lamontagne and Tremblay — sit as private members. But their real influence in the Commons will be something to watch, especially that of Mr. Gordon whose prompt resignation following the election made him something of a hero to his fellow Liberals.

Matched against these three are the trio of "new wave" Cabinet Liberals. Jean Marchand has the potentially important manpower portfolio. Pierre Elliot Trudeau is Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister Pearson. And Gerard Pelletier is on the farthest back bench. But all "3" symbol for the British Empire stems from the denarius, a three, from back bench to front, are the litmus paper of the silver coin of ancient Rome. Quebec, thrust into the acid test of Ottawa which has destroyed other Quebeckers.

The Tories to watch are Messrs. Hees, Fulton, Dick Bell and Joschimsthaler, chief of the Joachim Valley in Bohemia, an exceptionally stable money which was shortened to "thaler" and thence became known as "dollar".

The word "money" itself comes from the Roman goddess Juno Moneta, in whose temple the Roman mint was situated. The word "salary" comes from salarium, meaning salt rations in which Roman legions sometimes were paid when denarii were scarce.

Even the name "Dixie" used to denote the southern U.S.A. is, according to one story, based on money. At one time Mississippi $10 notes were issued in New Orleans and were called dixies after the French word "dix" ten.

At one time or another notes in denominations of $2, $4, $6, $8, $11, $12, $15 and $25 were issued on this continent. One of the rarest coins—now said to be worth about $20,000—each—are the California Slug, a $50 gold piece privately minted in 1851, and the 1804 silver dollar.

One of the strangest of all monetary symbols, however, was a piece of stone 30 inches in diameter and weighing 175 pounds. On the island of Yap in the Pacific Caroline Islands, this piece of money was worth 10,000 coconuts or one wife. C. P. Relay

ABOUT MONEY!

The Ming Dynasty in China— 1368-1399 A.D.—originated the use of paper money, according to an article in "Time Bizz". The paper note measured 8 1/4 by 3 1/2 inches and was worth one "kwan," which is the "cash". Our word cash is directly descended from the Chinese word, which means a string of coins.

Coinage, of course, is much older than paper money. It dates back about 5,000 years and the "3" symbol for the British Pe-

A PERMANENT SNOW FENCE TO KEEP ROADS OPEN

It is estimated that the cost of keeping Alberta roads free of snow could be cut by 50 per cent if snow fences were planted throughout the province.

According to P. D. McCalla, Supervisor of Horticulture with the Alberta Department of Agriculture, municipalities spend any where from $15,000 to $60,000 or $100,000 every year, depending upon the winter, in keeping roads open.

A start in reducing this large annual expenditure could be made, says Mr. McCalla, by planting a windbreak in areas which consistently cause trouble during the winter months. This plan could then be enlarged when the benefits of these early plantings are realized.

Mr. McCalla points out that some municipalities have already started tree planting programs which have proved very successful. They back slope the shoulder of the roads, seed them and the ditche to grass and then planted trees 100 to 125 feet back from the farmer's property line.

A single row of trees, properly looked after, says Mr. McCalla, will give permanent protection from drifting snow He suggests using shrub type trees such as sawagans or like for moderate windbreaks. In two or three years such a windbreak will give definite protection.

Further information on planting windbreaks can be obtained from district agriculturists. They have application forms and a complete list of trees supplied every year by Department of Agriculture nurseries. Application forms should be filled out immediately by those who want free trees this year.

ECHO EXPRESSES CAUTION!

O. G. Bratvold, Supervisor of Special Crops for Alberta, says commercial rapeseed growers appear to be exploiting the demand for seed of the variety Echo. He says offerings of commercial Echo to trade channels far exceed the potential supply from the 1965 plantings of this variety. This just simply means that some growers who have only commercial Polish rapeseed are calling it Echo in order to "cash in" on the premium for this variety.

Demand for Echo has been very keen because of its high yield. In tests across Western Canada it has out-yielded Polish by 15 to 20%. In addition it has improved straw strength and less tendency to shatter Present seed regulations permit the use of a varietal name on commercial seed of rapeseed. Since there a no way to distinguish ordinary rapeseed from the seed of Echo, this provides a loop-hole for unscrupulous growers The federal seeds act has been changed to prevent the use of a varietal name on commercial seed, but this regulation does not come into effect until July of 1967.

Mr. Bratvold points out that farmers who wish to buy Echo rapeseed should protect themselves by purchasing only certified seed. Certified seed provides a guarantee of varietal purity. Moreover, the bag is officially sealed under government supervision, and therefore germination and purity within the grade is assured.

EXTRA ENERGY AND VITAMIN A REQUIRED!

Feeding has not been as difficult this winter as last because of increased forage supplies and less wind. W C Gordon, Livestock Supervisor for Alberta, adds that temperatures in the 20-30 degree below range, increases energy requirements for maintenance 15-20 p. c. Thus if a 1000 pound cow requires 18 to 20 pounds of roughage for maintenance under moderate temperatures, she will require 23-24 pounds during these colder periods. Lots of dry bedding will minimize the heat loss and reduce the energy required.

Mr. Gordon suggests that January is a good time to start Vitamin A supplementation. Pregnant cows require about 20,000 I. U. of Vitamin A per day. Cattlemen who are sure of good carotene (Vitamin A) levels in their feed may choose not to supplement during the last six weeks or so before calving. Where Vitamin A levels of the feed have not been determined, or where the straw or weathered hay make up a large percentage of the ration, supplementation should be started much earlier. Regardless of when supplmentation is started it should be continued until the cows are back on green grass.

SEDGEWICK COUNCIL HOLDS TWO MEETINGS IN JANUARY

Mr. Lawrence Puyner was sworn in as Fire Chief for Sedgewick at the first regular meeting of the Council for 1966. After Mr Puyner had taken the Official Oath of Office some time was spent discussing the fire department with the council and it was decided to hold a meeting of the Fire Brigade in the near future.

Since the Provincial Assessor informed council that he would be unable to attend the Court of Revision scheduled for January 31st, it was decided to change the date to Monday, January 31st, at 7:30 p.m.

Communication, Financial Statement and minutes of the previous meeting along with minutes of Recreation Centre, the Flagstaff Lodge, the Natural Gas Co., and the Flagstaff Emergency Measures Organization were read and dealt with.

General Account bills No. 480 to 505 and Gas Account bills No. 116 to 119 were passed for payment.

A lengthy discussion was held with the Town Foreman regarding the general operation of the town.

It being 12:00 p.m. the meeting was adjourned until Monday, January 17th at 7:30 p.m. at which time business was resumed.

The Municipal Inspector's report was read and discussed.

It was decided in requisition the Department of Municipal Affairs to the assessing requirements for 1966 and the Firm of Beavan, Hutch and Company were appointed Auditors for 1966.

A Tax Sale will be held on March 25th on those parcels that were on the 1963 tax arrears list and are still unpaid.

Considerable discussion took place on the subject of policing in the community and it was decided to investigate this further.

George Rife Speaks To Central High UN Club

SEDGEWICK—Fifty-five were in attendance at Centrals U. N. Club presentation of George Rife of the Edmonton Journal on Saturday, January 15th.

His inspiring talk and two hundred hours in charge of Red China gave many in attendance some new ideas about Red China. From his expedition Mr. Rife found that the conditions of this country are much better than we are led to believe The country was very clean. He found the people very friendly and trustworthy. He mentioned that they never think of locking up their houses, cars, or business places, for they trust each other. Everyone does manual labor and they have the people believing that they run the government Pictures of their leader, Mao-Tse-Tung, appear in every house and business building. The countries goods are all rationed but nevertheless the people on the whole seem to be very content.

Mr. Rife was able to have this interesting trip through the P.U.A. and plans to be included in a similar group to India in February. Mr Rife was presented with a gift from the U.N. Club and we all hope to have him back again.

these mistakes and that except where necessary all cable would be in the ditch. He requested at least 48 hours notice before council moved in to do roadwork on roads where cable had been laid. A number of plans showing routes of buried cable will be forwarded to council.

A discussion on used machinery and equipment took place and it was agreed that all equipment for which there appeared to be no further use, should be collected and brought in to the M.D. yards to be cleaned, repainted and sold. Permission was also granted to paint the interior of the M. D. 29-43-11; survey

Advice was received from the Edmonton Union of Municipal Districts that the annual convention meeting would be held January 31st. It was agreed that as many councillors as possible should attend.

The report of Const. Vanderwoude for the month of December was read and accepted.

The M.D. of Wainwright advised that it would join with the M.D.'s of Provost and Flagstaff, and the County of Beaver for the purpose of implementing the Rural Road Inventory and future road needs study which is recommended by the Dept. of Highways. It was requested that a meeting of the four M. D.'s be held as soon as possible at Sedgewick office.

A letter from the County of Beaver advised that the annual Flagstaff Agricultural Municipal Committee would be held in Tofield on February 23rd. A cordial invitation was extended for Flagstaff to attend. The invitation was accepted, and 6 or 6 persons will attend.

Surveys received from Stewart, Weir, Stewart and Watson, were examined and checked as follows: Establishment of monuments for 3 acre parcel on the S.W. 34-40-11; establishment of monuments on N. E. 34-40-13 held by the District under Tax Recovery; Survey of road widening on N.E. 29-43-11; survey of road widening on E. Half 9-45-16.

Above surveys were approved, and that plans showing the survey of road widening be approved for registration and held pending receipt of agreements to purchase the necessary right of way.

The Agricultural Service Board meeting of January 7th minutes were read, with Mr. B. Lee in attendance. The discussion took place with respect to the recommendation of the Board that a "60" series Case tractor be purchased for the District for use in wire rolling fence construction and mowing. A committee was formed to investigate a used tractor of this type. The minutes were approved after discussion.

Meeting adjourned at 10:30 p.m., to meet again on Wednesday, Feb. 9th.

Why wait for spring?

In winter, men are available. Materials are available. And special off-season discounts are often available. So, doesn't it make a lot of sense to have those repairs and renovations done now. Not simply construction and building jobs—but things like having the lawnmower fixed and the screens mended; having the drapes cleaned and the rugs shampooed; having the furniture re-upholstered and the electrical appliances repaired. All jobs which can call for a long wait come Springtime—but which can be handled quickly, efficiently and easily during the winter season. What's more, government-sponsored, low-cost Home Improvement Loans are available right from your bank, to assist you in carrying out all kinds of renovation jobs you've been meaning to do—up to $4,000 with up to ten years to repay! No doubt about it—winter is the best time to spruce up your home or place of business. Do it now!
Everybody benefits when winter work is increased

In Memoriam

In memory of Ethel Culshaw who passed away January 28, 1965.
What would we give,
Her hand to clasp,
Her patient face to see
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
As in the days that used to be.
Ever remembered and sadly missed by her loving husband and children.

SUGAR AND SPICE

THE STURDY ONES REMAIN

This is the time of year when we get rid of all the undesirables in the community. By undesirables, I mean people with more money than I. They leave our northern community for Florida, Mexico, the West Indies.

In one fell swoop we get rid of all the selfish, the cowards, the sybarites. In short, the rich white trash.

It's as much a part of our heritage as the Saturday night bath, or spring cleaning. And I think it's a good thing.

When the last barber or bricklayer has dragged about being off to the Bahamas, when the last druggist or doctor has informed me pompously that "We'll probably take in Acapulco this year", I feel a sense of relief.

Then I rate have left the Freezing ship, and there's only the hard core, the sturdy pioneer types, the rugged individualists and the poor people, left in the temperate (habit) zone.

The rest of us, the best of us, can get down to the real glory of winter living, without stumbling over a lot of sissies who are better off down there getting sand in their navels.

As one of the old true-blue breed, fighting it out with the elements, I am inclined to scorn them. As a humanitarian, I can only pity them. Typical of what they're missing!

What is there in the soft and sensuous south to equal that crunch of toes breaking off, that crack of bursitis in the shoulder when you throw the first curling stone, that snap of thigh bones on the ski hill?

Let's take a look at a couple of these hot-weather breeds. Look at this bird in Florida. Gets out of bed and there's that same old crumbum, commonwealth blazing down just like all the other days. Same old routine. The inevitable orange juice on the inevitable patio, the inevitable trip to the beach with the inevitable obscenely fat sotties lying all around. Or the inevitable sweating it out on the golf course with a lot of other middle-aged liars.

And here's our pal in Mexico, just getting up at 10:30. He hasn't paid last year's income tax yet, but he borrowed $1,500 from the bank to make the trip. He has a hangover from those six-course, forty-cent Mexican drinks, and a twisted back from trying to tango.

His wife, in the other twin bed, looks like an inmate of Belsen, because she's had Mexicana complaint, commonly known as dire rear, ever since they crossed the border. She whines, he snarls. They loiter out into the meggy heat. And another horrible day in Acapulco has begun.

It's not like that around here. My daughter wakes me at six-thirty and I call a cheery good-morning. It may sound a bit more like "RUMPUS!" but it's well meant. My life's partner shoves me out with her foot ten minutes later.

Down to a jelly breakfast: vitamin pills, cuppa tea and half-slice of toast. There's the thrill of variety as you prepare for the day. When down comes, will the sun be shining, the snow falling, or a blizzard howling?

Out into the wild white yonder. Grab the shovel and make the snow fly, clucking heartily all the while at the folk of them going to and fro in the south, with nothing to do every day but the same old things.

The clean, fresh, northern air hits your lungs like a dum-dum bullet. Bark seal-like greeting to neighbour, whose head is just visible over his snowbank.

Off to the garage. Excitement of wondering whether the car will start. The sheer, demonic joy of belting out the driveway backwards and trying to smash through the bank the ploughboy has thrown up. Sometimes you make it.

The skidding, slithering adventure of the drive to work. Wheels spinning, visibility twelve feet, every man for himself.

The goodfellowship and vivacity of the factory floor. Clonkers, one-one stamping, cursing, and running at the nose.

And another day of glorious winter living has begun. Don't try to tell me about the seduction of the languorous southland. Just give me the crisp, virile challenge of living where men are men. And you can tell them from women. When you get them thereof out.

Baptist Church

The Youth for Christ film "Misfit" which was scheduled for Monday night January 24, in our church, has been postponed to a later date.

The weather on Sunday was far from being pleasant. Sunday morning service was attended slightly, however we had an excellent attendance for the evening service.

We are truly thankful for the ministry of Rev. and Mrs. Sipke who are in charge of the evening services in the absence of a Pastor.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK
Blessed are they who have no little, but give as much, while others have so much and give as little. A missionary and a christian ought to be one and the same.

—Miss Gertrude Nelson, originally from Edmonton, is now teaching at the Woodstock School in Manchuria. Of late, because of communist tyranny, she has been forced to leave her home and take money out of the country. This is due to a large overseas trading deficit and they don't want any more New Zealand currency out of the country then possible. The currency is currently based on Sterling, the coinage is very heavy (pennies the size of half dollars) and the five pound note is almost as large as a share certificate. They will be going on the dollar basis in February, 1967, which will leave Britain as the only Sterling member of the Commonwealth.

While in Auckland I was fortunate to arrange an interview with a Stock and Station Agency. These establishments are very common here and we had wondered about their function. In a nutshell, they buy and sell livestock (breeding, feeders and fat), wool, farm machinery, fertilizer, grain and farm real estate. They act as bankers to the farmer, both in deposit and a financing capacity. While a farmer is financed by the company, he is expected to use all their other facilities. Commission rates for wool and stock are currently about 4 percent and finance charges 7. Other services provided are, booking agents for Shaw-Savill Lines, and providing farmers with overseas funds if they wish to go abroad and is not permitted to take sufficient N. Z. funds with him.

Also discovered that the average farmer here supports two crops per acre with young, but to maintain this production 200-1200 pounds of fertilizer is applied yearly at total cost of $20 to $30 per acre. Superphosphate and Potash are basic elements used rather than Nitrogen and in the South Island, lime is the necessary ingredient.

Wheat growers are heavily subsidized to discourage wheat imports. Farmers sell to a wheat board and the stock & station agent then sells it back to feeders at a set price All their grain is bagged at the combine (they don't have buyers), however they hope to convert to bulk handling soon. This will be a great benefit to farmers on the North Island, as the handling charges to ship in bulk from the grain growing South Island is currently very high. — George & Beverly Davison.

DO YOU KNOW!
THAT—the recognition that a government is there to work for the people and not the people for the government is a fundamental difference between the Social Credit concept and the Socialistic concept.
THAT—the declared patterns of communistic takeover is through a decadent capitalistic Welfare State and cold war economic aggression.
THAT—local conditions and foreign developments are forcing us to find a new way or else go under to communism.

Tour Moving To Australia

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Tomorrow we sail on the "Canberra" to Australia. The boat arrives in Sydney on January 30th, and from there we plan on driving to Adelaide, capital of South Australia.

When we were re-tagging our baggage this morning, what happened to an Australian in Canada, came to mind. She labelled her baggage in Sydney, New South Wales. When it didn't appear on board the "Canberra" enquiries were started and it was discovered that the C.P.R. had shipped her goods to Sydney, Nova Scotia. When we last saw her on arrival in Auckland, she was planning a three week hiking tour of the North Island and she was certainly travelling light.

The better part of the last week has been spent here in Auckland, the largest city in N. Z. It is situated near the North tip of the North Island. It has four old volcanic hills in the middle of it. From one of these, Mt. Eden, one can see both the coast (Pacific) and Wops (Tasman Sea) in the centre of the Mount is the crater, now grassed and in pasture, which they have still cinker-like rocks at the fumeroles. Sheep graze here although it is in the middle of the city.

It has been time to have a bit of a rest, although inevitably we have been taken up with travel arrangements. There are stringent Australian currency controls here and one has to apply to the Reserve Bank to take money out of the country. This is due to a large overseas trading deficit and they don't want any more New Zealand currency out of the country then possible. The currency is currently based on Sterling, the coinage is very heavy (pennies the size of half dollars) and the five pound note is almost as large as a share

Kinettes To Sponsor Baby Sitters Course

SEDGEWICK— Will you help us? Your boy or girl is performing a valuable and responsible service of which you can be justly proud. We know you will want them to continue to help other parents. But we want to know, as you do, that your child is safe while he or she is out "sitting" and that the children who are left in your child's care, are equally safe.

The Kinette Club of Sedgewick in co-operation with the Alberta Safety Council, will sponsor a Baby-Sitting Course, to be held in the near future The course consists of five sessions on. 1. Ethics of Baby Sitting (what the employer expects and what the sitter expects) 2. Child care: 3. First Aid; 4. Fire Safety; 5. Safety.

Great care has been taken to provide lessons which will give sitters the knowledge and assurance to care for their employer's most precious possession, their children. The parents' responsibility is [illegible]

Too often parents rush off when the sitter arrives without leaving adequate instructions on where they may be contacted, directions about food, night clothing, medicine, their Doctor's name and phone number, and what to do in case of an emergency

The Baby Sitting course is free and is open to all boys and girls of baby-sitting age. The Club has stations applicants to date. Many particulars will appear in next week's paper. For any other information please contact Mrs. Gordon Peterson, phone 384-3624 or Mrs. Brian Hamilton, phone 384-3694, Sedgewick.

Hardisty Man Freezes To Death

HARDISTY— The Town of Hardisty and surrounding district was shocked to learn of the sudden accidental death of Mr. Walter Hansen, farmer who lives south of the Town of Hardisty.

Mr. Hansen's frozen body was found by his brother Art, in the yard of their farm home. It is believed that he suffered from a heart attack while walking to the house, and in the sub-zero weather was unable to survive.

Stamps Have Hex On Killam Indians

Killam Indians were host to the Hardisty Stampeders on Saturday evening and the Stamps were once again the winners, this time by a score of 6 to 4.

Stampeders seem to have a hex on the Indians as the Red Men have gone down to defeat every time the two clubs have met in league competition for the past two seasons.

Next Saturday night the Indians will be in the Stampeders home corral for the last scheduled meeting of these two teams this winter and if the Stamps win again it will make two complete seasons they have dominated the Indians.

Unofficial league standings as compiled by the Community Press as of Tuesday, Feb. 1st have Hardisty in first place with 8 points each, and Wainwright tied with 16 points each. Killam is in fourth spot with 14 pts., followed by Viking with 10 and Daysland with 8.

All league games must be completed by February 13th and the team standings could be changed radically by the end of the schedule. All teams still have a chance to make the playoffs if they come on strong in the remaining games.

KNOX UNITED LADIES JANUARY MEETING

KILLAM— Fifteen members responded to roll call at the January meeting held in the manse. Vice-President Mrs. J. Forster presided. Mrs. R. Wegenast led the worship period and Mrs. W. Forster gave the study on Trinidad. Annual reports were given by officers and committees

It was decided to continue our bazaar fund as usual. A budget for the year was presented. A committee to map out plans for the U.C.W. Club, re-renovating the church kitchen. Allocation to Presbyterial will be the same as previously

The warmer temperatures brought some snow and winds with it and this often makes it feel much colder than it actually is.

There has been considerable drifting, and snow plows have been busy keeping the roads open. In spite of the efforts though, the rural school students had to be dismissed one day in order to get them home before the roads became blocked.

Yesterday, tradition has it, the little Woodchuck, commonly referred to as the Groundhog, was supposed to emerge from hibernation in his hole in the ground, take quick look from the entrance of his home to survey the world for weather forecast. If he was as smart as Groundhogs are supposed to be he probably threw up his paws in disgust and went back to sleep. The legend has it that if he finds dull and dark skies he ramains up and prepares to take up life where he left off last fall. If the sun is shining he gets back to bed for the six more weeks. Well that's what the legend says anywhere.

But from what the weathermen says, the little Woodchuck just better go back to bed in either case, because the man with the instruments of weather conditions.

Of course this could all be changed by the time this report hits the streets, and things could be a lot warmer. That's what we like about Albertans. Hope springs eternal

Strome Group May Form A Car Club

STROME—Boys from Strome and surrounding district gathered in Memorial Hall Tuesday Jan. 11th to discuss the possibilities of starting a Car Club. There were 20 in attendance. The motive of the club is to inforce law amongst the young people and improve the public's attitude towards the teenage driver.

It was decided to borrow a constitution from another club, to use as a guide to follow in the formation of one for the Strome Club. Also to approach some organization in town to act as sponsor. Those derbies was the chosen name for the club, and Roy Eshpeter was appointed as acting President with Rod Curtis as acting Sec. Some of the suggested Club Activities were dances, sports events, picnics and parties.

R.C.M.P. constable Cliff Creaker was invited to be guest speaker at the next meeting and a suggestion was made that the A.M.A. office be approached for information and help concerning the clubs operation and management.

LOSES TWO TEETH SCORES THREE GOALS

SEDGEWICK—In a rugged and rough game which saw 14 penalties handed out, including one misconduct, the Sedgewick Midgets took the Killam club into camp to the tune of 7-3, on January 30th.

The game was marred by rough play with most of the penalties being handed out for roughing and tripping. Arntzen of the Sedgewick club had a couple teeth knocked out in a scrimmage, but came back into the game to score three goals for the hat trick.

Killam opened the scoring at 2.56 of the first period, with the Sedgewick boys scoring twice, at the 17.51 and 19.22 marks to close out the first frame leading 2--1.

Two quick goals to start the second period gave the Sedgewick club a 4--1 lead. Killam scored on a long counter by Graf, with Sedgewick replying with two goals by Bowness and Arntzen, to lead going into the final frame 6--3. Each club scored once in the final period to end the game 7--3 for Sedgewick.

Goals for Killam were scored by, W. Lewis, Graf and W. Lewis; Tallon for Sedgewick were by, Tom Leslie, Olsen, Bowness, Muirhead and Arntzen (3).

Referees were Jim Tindall and Bernard Simpson.

SIX FEWER DEATHS IN 1965 ACCIDENTS

While we killed six fewer people on the highways of Alberta during 1965 than we did in 1964, there is still nothing for the drivers to be proud of. Last year we manage to kill 345 people on our roads, only six less than the year before. And remember some of these were right here in our own area. So we haven't learned too much about driving and road safety over the past twelve months. Accidents also showed a pretty gloomy picture, with a 9 percent increase to 37,094. This can-

Relief From Cold Finally Arrives

In many areas temperatures of ten degrees wouldn't be considered very warm or very nice but to local residence its almost like summer. After a month of 30 to 40 below zero temperatures, ten above brought everyone out of hibernation.

Minor Hockey Week!

Last week across Canada the young hockey players of the nation were spotlighted in what has become known as Minor Hockey Week in Canada. Special hockey games and other programs were held to bring to the public attention, the importance of physical activities in organized and supervised games. When properly held, supervised and coached, the far-reaching results of such enterprises are beyond calculation. Besides the physical fitness angle of the program, these youngsters are trained in the more lasting necessities of such things as alertness, grasping opportunity, pride in doing a thing well, and ability to work closely with others, sharing the spotlight by accepting an assist instead of a goal. There is little doubt that some of these little fellows will be the national players of tomorrow, and the size and comfort of the rink has little to do with it. Such great national sport figures as Glen Hall, Norm Ulman, Gordie Howe, all named to the N.H.L. All-Star Team, got their start in the prairies, on the small country rinks of the open-air variety, where facilities were few, but individual determination high. Any lad of ability and determination, with proper coaching, can be named to the All-Star Team in ten to fifteen years from now. It's a good clean goal to aim at.

Alberta Legislature To Open!

The third session of the 15th Legislature will open in Alberta two weeks from today, with the usual formalities, and with a familiar but new face taking part. Hon. Grant McEwan, Lt.-Gov. of Alberta will read the Throne Speech as he enters upon his new duties.

Nothing very startling is expected to come out of the new session in the way of new legislation and the sitting takes on the appearance of another prolonged and dull few weeks of routine business. Of course with the government holding down 55 seats in a 63 seat house, nothing very exciting can happen. The four men in the opposition may have the satisfaction however, of seeing legislation presented by the government which they first proposed, among which are the question of an Ombudsman which was first proposed by the co-alition member from Banff-Cochrane; a plebiscite on Sunday Sports requested by Mr. Dickie, Liberal member from Calgary; simple majority on fluoridation, introduced by the opposition.

One almost certain outcome of this month's session is that the total budget will be up by several million dollars, and be at least 20 percent higher than last year's record $500 million. This unavoidable increase will be due mostly to higher education and health requirements, and the ever increasing trend towards welfare.

The one surprise which may follow the session is an announcement of a 1966 provincial election. Opposition parties have not been too well organized in Alberta during the past few years, but with new leaders on the scene Mr. Manning may see a change in their fortunes to some extent and spring a vote before things get too well organized in the enemy camps.

Conformity or Responsibility?

The Hon. Robert Thompson is coming in for severe opposition criticism for voting with the government on non-confidence motions, and thereby keeping them in power. Without the votes of the Thompson followers the government would have been defeated and the country plunged into another federal election. The rest of the opposition may be riled up at Thompson, but he has the admiration of the Canadian public in putting national responsibility ahead of party politics. He has earned public acclaim too putting the necessities of the nation and individuals ahead of party. The two non-confidence motions so far brought forth were of such little importance and significance that their defeat of the government would have failed to enhance the stature of the Canadian Parliament. Apparently Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Douglas have not yet learned the truth of this. Defeat of a government just for the sake of defeating it has little to recommend it. This is something that should be taught to leaders, and the best people to teach them the lesson are the back-bench members. All these people have to do is get out and converse with their constituents and then carry the message back to Ottawa. This takes courage, and that is something too many of our present day members are without.

Where Is The Law?

The transit strike that paralized New York City for 12 days is estimated to have cost more than $600 million. The effect of the injury list that may be attributed to the strike in unknown, but in any event the strike was a catastrophe, and more so because it was a man-made disaster. It was one of the most extreme abuses on record of the right to strike. In fact New York State law declares it illegal for public employees to strike, and so in this instance the union leaders did not even have the right to strike. Union leaders simply defied the law and publicly tore up court orders. Where is the law?

Once each month the list of subscribers to the Community Press is corrected and brought up to date and once in a while we count all the names to see how many subscribers we have. This was done last week and there are now 1535 paid subscribers to the Press, up 76 since last count was made in September.

Last week I mentioned a school teacher I'd had some years ago and ended the last sentence with a question mark. Well before the ink was hardly dry on the pages two young fellows were in here telling me about one of their teachers. It turned out to be Mrs. Lorne Roggenrach of Lougheed. They didn't get any argument from me, I've known her for some years that they have been around, and she can have children any time she wants too.

I haven't seen anything official but it seems to be aggreed that dried fish was given out in 1837 and MacKenzie King was the Prime Minister at that time. All this talk reminded people of the Bennett Buggies which were almost anything with four wheels and a horse and provided cheap transportation.

Day after day people send and receive letters with never a hitch but once in a while you hear about a letter that went astray. Recently the head office of the U.S. Postal Department mailed a properly addressed letter in the Federal Justice Department to a friend just two blocks away in Washington, D.C. That trip took four days and covered hundreds of miles around the U.S.A.

Upon reading the statement by a medical researcher that blaming causes tooth decay, a 35-year-old man (who looks all-of 55) with a complete set of artificial choppers exclaimed, "Now he tells me!"

Other Editors Say

HIDDEN TAXATION

Those who speak most vehemently in favor of public ownership of utilities overlook the danger of the "hidden tax" feature which is so often used by governmental agencies to augment revenues. Apparently working on the theory that hidden taxes are best because they arouse no complaint from an ignorant public, publicly - owned utilities often splice consumer bills to siphon off funds for other government agencies.

When governments operate public utilities, of course, they pay no taxes to the government, and are supposed to operate on a non-profit basis to provide the best service to the people at minimal costs. But does it work out this way?

Take B.C., for instance, where the Social Credit government took over the B.C. Electric and now operate the electrical power and gas distribution systems in Vancouver.

The Vancouver Province recently reprinted copies of gas bills for a former Penoka resident, George Winfield, who now lives in North Surrey, B.C.

Mr. Winfield showed a copy of his gas bill from Penoka: 107 therms used, costing $8.42. He compared them with his B.C. (government) bill: 103 thermal units cost $14.62.

The Vancouver paper points out that the gas has to travel farther to it major market in Vancouver than it does to Penoka; but it also notes that in Seattle, Wash., which is 130 miles farther from its gas supply than is Vancouver, the same Canadian gas sells for 4.5% less than the BC Hydro's rate in its major city.

So, at least with this government-owned agency, the BC public is bilked two ways: first, because it collects no taxes from the BC Hydro; second, because it pays a higher rate for gas, which can be considered nothing less than an extra hidden tax.—Lacombe Globe

Society Built On Sand

OTTWA—Federal and Provincial Governments, in new sessions of their legislatures, are finally giving priority to education and the war on poverty.

In Canada, as elsewhere, poverty and ignorance go hand in hand. Find the uncraised, the uneducated, and generally speaking, there you find the poor.

The logic of this seems simple, but it has eluded Federal and Provincial Governments for too many years. They have failed to ensure an educated population, a trained labour force, and deeply-rooted poverty has been the result in many parts of Canada.

Only recently have governments, and Canadians generally, begun to pay unconcerned attention to the ugly blemishes marring the fair complexion of their country.

This year, the year before the Centennial, will mark truly massive spending by Federal and Provincial Governments in an effort to raise educational standards and wipe out poverty.

Some of these efforts will be undertaken jointly by the two levels of government. Some will be undertaken separately. But the total spending on welfare, education, and manpower training will be reckoned in the billions.

The Federal Government will put upwards of $250 million into the Canada Assistance Plan, to be matched by the provinces, to help the needy, the aged, the infirm, widows and orphans.

There will be a vast improvement in technical training, with millions going into a new program under which unemployed persons will be paid while undergoing retraining in technical schools.

There will be a special $50 million fund for rural development, and increased help for marginal farm areas.

The provinces will spend hundreds of millions on new schools, special allowances, teacher training, and equipment.

The federal government will put $180 million into university grants, an increase of $40 million over last year. Another $40 million in Federal money will provide 40,000 university scholarships and bursaries over the next four years.

This spending, of course, is in addition to current spending on pensions, family allowances, education, technical training, and health. It is also in addition to the multi-billion dollars of universal medical insurance the Federal Government hopes to set in motion next year.

It is huge, expensive program. But we cannot say it is too much. We can only hope it is not being undertaken too late.

The face of Canada today is basically one of prosperity. For a long time governments acted as though that were the only face. But now surveys and special studies have delineated the profile of poverty.

It is an unflattering profile, to say the least. Here are the salient features, taken from a federal working paper presented to the Federal-provincial conference on poverty last December.

The Canadian poor are numbered in the millions. Close to a million Canadian families have incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

In 1961, one in 20 of all Canadian dwellings was dilapidated.

In the same year, of all Canadians over 15, more than 5 million, or 47 per cent had no more than elementary schooling. During the time of heavy unemployment, half the unemployed people in Canada had not finished primary school.

This points up the essential link between poverty and ignorance, and conversely, between prosperity and education.

It will probably come as a severe shock to many Canadians to learn that this is an ill-educated country, by comparison with its economic idol, the U.S.

There has been a smug acceptance in Canada that while the U.S. might surpass Canada in material things, our educational system is superior to that of the vulgar, acquisitive Americans.

Facts are now beginning to shatter this myth.

The Economic Council of Canada, in its second annual report, said that the lower level of education in Canada was a major reason for lower levels of income here. Years of effort would be required to close the educational gap between Canada and the U.S.

The Council reported that 11.1 per cent of the U.S. labour force had university education, compared to 3.5 per cent in Canada. That ratio also held for high school education.

The situation is obviously not improving. Finance Minister Sharp stated recently that 30 per cent of Canadians between the ages of 14 and 24 have left school with only Grade eight education. "Those were tomorrow's poor", said Mr. Sharp.

Basically, the lesson is clear. Canada's poor lack of training, and those who lack training lack the means of improving their conditions.

The Letter Box

Mr. Editor:

I have just been discharged as a patient from St. Anne's Hospital in Edmonton and after I've as citizens of such a small town as Hardisty appreciate as we have been having the service of such a thoroughly competent Doctor, as well as such a well-staffed hospital as we have in Hardisty. One would go a long way before finding a more "human" atmosphere. a better Doctor, more obliging, efficient nurses, and last but not least by say means, sweeter and more personally concerned Sisters, in any hospital, large or small, than we have right in Hardisty in my estimation there aren't any better.

So citizens of Hardisty and surrounding districts who have benefited from this institution, or may in the near future (one never knows) I repeat, let us stand behind this most efficient Hospital. Let us do all we can to encourage these consecrated folks who are keeping our hospital at the top of the list for efficiency. Therefore I would say, Hats off to St. Anne's Hospital, Doctor, Nurses and Sisters.—Mrs. F. M. Caulton, Hardisty.

SEED GERMINATION TESTS

In the past few weeks I have heard reports that some good looking oats were germinating only 80%. If this situation is general this could be bad.

On Friday I checked with the Plant Products Division in Edmonton regarding germination tests. Mr. Ross indicated that the results were about the same as last year. About one third of the Oat samples tested were below 70% germination. Whenever we have frost occuring before the oats are entirely ripe or harvested the germination can be affected.

Mr. Ross did recommend checking germination before cleaning seed At present they have been able to keep up with the demand for tests. They give a result in about 3 weeks time.

Check the germination of your seed. It is better to be sure than sorry.

SWINE BUILDING TOUR

On Thursday, January 20th twenty-three farmers from the M.D. of Flagstaff travelled to the Edmonton District to tour different types of Hog Barn facilities. We visited four farmers and examined the types of buildings and methods of handling hogs.

I'm sure no one returned with a clear idea of the best method of raising pigs. But everyone did see practices that were working well and others not so well. If these taking in the tour have a clearer idea of type of buildings they would like and how they would develop their hog enterprises the tour was a success.

MANAGING A WINTER VENTILATING SYSTEM

Most ventilating problems in livestock barns can be cured without very much trouble, says R. Constable, Assistant Extension Engineer with the Alberta Department of Agriculture.

He points out that although improperly designed ventilating systems and poor judgement are sometimes responsible for condensation, frosting and smoke from the furnace being drawn into the building, these problems are more often the result of a mismanaged ventilating system. Most of these difficulties can usually be overcome by watching the following points.

1. When it gets cold, do not turn all the fans off. A small fan on low speed should be kept running continuously. Without fan ventilation, the temperature in the barn will vary considerably with notable weather changes. A good fan ventilation system will keep the barn at the right temperature and at the same time control the relative humidity.

2. Do not have fans operated entirely by thermostatic controls. Thermostats should be connected only to the high speed of a two speed fan or to supplementary fans.

3. Do not block off air intakes. Blocking off intakes will restrict the movement of air by the fans which in turn will result in wet, humid conditions and in furnace smoking.

4 Keep exterior air inlets free of snow and frost.

5 Keep fans clear of frost and ice.

6. Keep buildings as nearly full as possible.

Anyone who has serious ventilation problems should contact his district agriculturist who will call in an Extension Engineer for expert advice.

With a last load of manpower home under the Canadian economy there can be no real stability.

As long as Canadians are poorly educated, there will be poverty and more. And as long as there is poverty, there can be little joy and little assurance in an effective society built on sand.

Daysland Fire Brigade To Operate Ambulance

DAYSLAND—The regular Town Council Meeting of January 17th was held in the Town Office with six Councillers present and Mayor Pryce presiding.

Mr. P. Schartzle of Municipal Engineering dropped in for a short discussion in regards to the Water System.

In regards to business arising out of the meeting it was reported that Mr. Steve Lupino had been engaged to fix the door on the Petterson house and that the fire brigade had decided to operate the ambulance service for Mr. Hoveland.

Palmer Engineering Services spent considerable time with Council outlining a Natural gas distribution system for the town of Daysland. Council decided that needed further study and agreed to again discuss this program at the meeting of February 21st.

Blue Flame Gas Distributors tendered a proposition to supply the Town with propane for all of their present needs. Moved that this tender be tabled and that Cr. Cranston be appointed to negotiate with all propane outlets in this area and report to February meeting.

Mr. Alex Blatz, Councillor for the Western area of the M. D of Flagstaff met with Town Council to discuss a proposed main road that the M. D of Flagstaff contemplated building along the east boundary of Daysland The M. D would need 17 feet of extra road space from the Town, as part of this land is park area for Mr Blatz said they would disturb as little as possible of this ground and haul needed dirt from borrow pits. They needed an easement from the Town and would deal with the private owners along this right of way themselves. It was moved that the Town grant the M. D of Flagstaff an easement on a 17 foot right of way along the east boundary of Town to build up a road and the M.D in return give the Town of Daysland all the black dirt they can spare.

LINDA MORGAN WED AT DAYSLAND

WEISGERBER - MORGAN

KILLAM — At a double-ring Nuptial Mass at Our Lady Of The Prairies R. C. Church at Daysland, on November 6th, 1965, Linda Darlene Morgan and Gerald Joseph Weisgerber were united in marriage. The bride is the youngest daughter of Mr and Mrs. Bill Morgan of Killam, and the groom is the second youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Lobe Weisgerber of Nordegg. Rev. Fr. Elkin performed the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked lovely in a floor length gown of silk organza over satin and lace with lily-point sleeves. Her nylon shoulder-length veil was held in place by a headpiece of pearls and sequins. She carried a bouquet of red roses with streamers covered with rosebuds.

The maid of honor was Mrs. Pat Swoboda, sister of the bride. The bridesmaids were Miss Audrey Fuson and Miss Linda Shepet, both cousins of the bride. The brides-maids were identical turquoise street-length gowns of nylon sheer over rayon taffeta, with delicate ny-lon and acetate lace jackets. The maid of honor was dressed simil-arly, but in pink. They carried bou-quets of white carnations and pink net with white satin streamers. The headpieces matched the bou-quets. They wore aurora borealis necklace and earring sets, gifts of the bride

The groom was attended by his brother Raymond, Mr. Teddy Mor-gan, brother of the bride, and Earl Thomas, friend of the groom. The ushers were Mr. Billy Morgan and Mr. Roger Petersen, cousin of the bride Miss Cheryl Schaffler of Kil-lam sang during the ceremony, ac-companied by Helen Kinzer

Mother of the bride wore a one-piece dress of ivory and dark brown brocade with chocolate brown ac-cessories, and a carnage of pink roses. Mother of the groom chose a one-piece double-knit blue dress with black accessories and corsage of pink roses, topped by a white mink wrap.

In charge of the guest book was Miss Bonnie Hart, cousin of the bride

The reception which followed for 125 was held in the Elks Hall, Kil-lam, catered to by the Royal Pur-ple. The bride's table was centered by a 3-tier wedding cake baked by the bride's mother and decorated by Mrs. Lesther of Laughead. Bou-quets of flowers, and candles on either side completed the centre. Fr Elkin proposed a toast to the bride, to which the groom capably responded. Mr Dale Heimund was M. C. Open house was held at the Elks Hall, followed by a dance, with music by Vern Erickson.

For going away the bride chose a 3-piece suit of light blue double-knit, with white accessories, and a corsage of white roses. After a hon-eymoon at Calgary and Nordegg, the happy couple have made their home in Killam.

Out of town guests were from: Calgary, Edmonton, Laughead, Pur-cellburg, Nordegg, Barrhead, Mac-iaville, Bloomsbury and Red Deer.

ALBERTA PROVIDES FREE POLIO VACCINE

The danger of suffering from an attack of Polio can be lessened, if not entirely eliminated, by just a bit of favorable reception from the public to Sabin Oral Vaccine The provincial government makes this vaccine available free of charge and only requires a response by the people to help eliminate another dread disease

If you have completed the series of three Salk Polio Injections, who-ever adult or child, you may re-ceive the vaccine from your local Health Unit If you have not had the three series, now is a good time to look into the matter

Sabin Vaccine is more than just a booster, for it also protects you from becoming a carrier of Polio Virus.

The government urges Albertans to protect themselves and their family by obtaining this final stage of treatment against Polio infection, and those who have not yet com-pleted their Salk injections should do so immediately.

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and local citizens are urged to look into the matter now.

statistics were more road acci-dents than in 1964 December deaths and accidents were down, due no doubt to colder weather and fewer cars on the roads.

One would almost be inclined to think that drivers would soon learn the lessons of careful driving, for of the total killed last year, 162 were drivers themselves, who at the same time caused the death of 137 pas-sengers. These deaths are caused through collisions is shown by the fact that only 41 pedestrians were killed.

Mary Crone Married At Turner Valley United

NELSON — CRONE

A lovely wedding took place in the United Church in Turner Valley, Jan. 22, 1966 at 4:00 p.m. when Mary Avaline, youngest daughter of Mrs. Avaline Hulda Crone, Hardisty, became the bride of Mr. Alfie Neal Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Atle S. Nelson, Fruit Vale B.C.

Reverend Lang conducted the double ring ceremony. The church was decorated with white mums and carnations.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her eldest brother Fred, of Hardisty. She looked lovely in a white street length dress of brocade with silver over lay leaf, elbow length sleeves, boot neckline and bell skirt. Her four-tiered shoulder length veil was held in place with a tiara of pearl and rhinestones. She wore white satin shoes and carried a bouquet of trailing red sweet heart roses. Her only jewelry was a drop pearl pendant, gift of the groom.

Mrs. Violet Webster, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She wore a blue street-length dress of brocade satin with silver overlay leaf, elbow length sleeves, boat neckline and bell skirt. Her jewelry was pearl necklace, gift of the bride.

The groom was attended by his brother Mr. Richard Allen Nelson of Fruit Vale B.C.

Ushers were Mr. Albert Nelson, brother of the groom and Mr. Kenneth Ronson, cousin of the groom. Both are from Fruit Vale.

Mrs. Loree Brown of Camrose sang "The Wedding Prayer" during the signing of the register. She was accompanied by Mrs. Mimms at the organ.

A lovely reception was held at the Turner Valley Golf and Country Club. The table was centered with a three-tiered cake made by the groom's mother and decorated by the bride's sister, Mrs. Webster. There were bouquets of white chrysanthemums and turquoise carnations.

The bride's mother wore a mid-night blue velvet suit with yellow rose corsage and white accessories.

The groom's mother wore a dusty rose cardigan suit of lace with corsage of yellow roses and beige accessories.

For her wedding trip the bride chose a suit of turquoise blue wool crepe with a corsage of pink roses.

Mr. Vernon Sleboraza, uncle of the bride, was master of ceremonies. Telegrams arrived from Victoria B.C., Fruit Vale B.C., and Hines Creek, Alberta.

The happy couple will reside in Fruit Vale, B.C. after they return from their wedding trip by car to California and Mexico.

All guest were from out of town with the exception of Mr. and Mrs. John Rubenek who opened their spacious home to the wedding party.

Silver Wedding At Rosyth Hall

ROSYTH—The Rosyth community hall was tastefully decorated with silver bells and flowers in the occasion of the 25th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Art Wynn.

During the afternoon many old acquaintances were renewed, while music was supplied by Mrs. I. Bell on the piano and Mrs. Fyvie's and his saxophone. A gay sing-song was held, led by Francis Bias with Peggy Burnett at the piano. Several other musical numbers were enjoyed.

The bride's table was laid with linen and lace cloth, with silver Mums centered around a beautiful wedding cake flanked by silver and pink tapers. Seated at the guest table with Arlene and Art were Mrs. Sarah Wynn, Melvin, mother and brother of the bride; Mrs. Ruth Longman, sister of the bride; Mable and Rena Great of Edmonton, Miss M. Johnson and Lockie Sampson. Mrs. L. Sampson as M.C., kept the entertainment gay. Jillan Sullivan gave an inspiring recitation.

Mrs. Olive, on behalf of the community, presented a gift of money, expressing best wishes from all. Many other gifts from family and friends were received, including 25 silver dollars from Arlene's mother on direction. Art and Arlene gracefully thanked everyone for coming to make the day a memorable occasion. Miss Joann Longman was in charge of the guest book which was signed by over 300 guests.

The wedding cake was made by Miss M. Johnson and decorated by Mrs. Begstie o Hughenden. A delicious lunch was served by ladies of the Rosyth FWUA, with Doreen Bell and Loren Longman serving the head table.

Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. F. Wuyan and family of Penaka, Mr. and Mrs. Art Sampson and son of Edmonton, Mr. and Mrs. L. Sampson of Red Deer, Mr. and Mrs. V. Sampson of Irma, Mr. and Mrs. G. Sampson of Camrose, Mrs. Donna Sampson of Camrose, Mr. and Mrs. Don Levitt of Paradise Valley, Mr. and Mrs. Stan Hastings and family of Furantburg, Mr. and Mrs. L. Baptist Church

One of the laymen conducted the Bible Study and prayer service on Wednesday night. The annual business meeting followed at which time the budget for 1966 was drawn up and approved. The list of officers for the church for the coming year was accepted with one position yet to be filled.

On Friday night the young people from Killam and surrounding towns gathered for Youth Night at Camrose. Following a lively singsong, the film entitled "Misfit" proved to contain a worthwhile message for both young and old.

Rev. Sipix was in charge of the Sunday services. Several special musical numbers were also appreciated.

We are sorry to report that Miss M. Patton is a patient in the Killam Hospital.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

As we accept new positions and responsibilities in the church for 1966 may we remember that — "Others may do a greater work, But you have your part to do; And no one in all God's heritage Can do it so well as you."

Weekly Devotion

COMMANDING ATTRACTION OF CHRIST

Jesus prevents easy condemnation. With most of us He does even more. He compels us to shoulder responsibilities we would like to dodge, forces us to undertakings which we think and He keeps us at them.

A college student had flung resistants of home and church to the winds and was warned of impending disaster replied, "I feel I ought, but I don't want to." For a while he didn't but later got himself in bond and redeemed his college standing. When asked later what happened he said, "Something out of my Christian training rose up and grabbed me." Apostle Paul would have said he, "was apprehended of Christ Jesus."

Men tired and discouraged in the battle with social and authoritarian forces find Jesus a commander with authority. A Jesuit scholar, Father George Tyrrell, attempted to indoctrinate his beloved Roman Catholic Church to tone up its morals by scientific and historical investigation and accord her scholars greater freedom. He says wrote in a letter, —I have been tempted to give up the struggle but always the figure of that strange Man on the cross sends me back to my work." Tyrrell was excommunicated by his church but the Holy Spirit of Christ used his questions and the impetus of his efforts to inspire others the whole future scope of his church and all

Race For Playoff Births Very Close In B.R.H.L.

TO SAVE LIVES? U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson explained the resumption of bombing against North Vietnam after the 37-day lull with the statement that it would save lives of U.S., South Vietnamese and other soldiers fighting the Viet Cong, since those forces are supplied by the north. He called for a resuming of the U.N Security Council to discuss measures to open the door to negotiations on the Vietnam conflict, but the U-N was unable to rise to the challenge.

One of the tightest races for the playoffs in the Battle River League history is taking place this year. The four teams to finish highest in the league standings play in the semi-finals and after last Friday evening's games there was a four-way tie for first place with Hardisty, Killam, Irma, and Wainwright all having 18 points.

In Saturday night's games Hardisty defeated Killam while both Wainwright and Irma were winning their games to maintain a three way tie at 20 points.

Monday night saw the Hardisty Stampeders take over sole possession of first place when they defeated Wainwright by a score of 8 to 4 and moved up to 22 points. Dayaland Northstars took Irma into camp 4 to 2. These two games left Irma and Wainwright tied for second place with 20 points each.

In the other Monday night game the Viking squad defeated the Killam Indians 8 to 6 which leaves Killam in fourth place with 18 points.

Viking now has 12 points and Dayaland 10.

This week will see the end of the regular schedule in B.R.H.L. for this winter with the semi-final starting next Monday evening. With several games to be played before the end of the week there will be some shifting of the standings which determines how the teams meet in the playoffs and where the games will be played.

The playoffs this year should produce some fine games as there is much difference between the four top teams in the quality of their play.

THEY'RE HEADING HOME. Canada is pulling 730 troops out of the Gaza Strip and abandoning the reconnaissance role it has performed for the U-N peace-keeping force in Egypt since April, 1957. The force was responsible for patrolling a 25-mile desert section of the Egyptian-Israeli frontier. As a substitute, Canada will now provide 30 more transport drivers and 12 more signallers to the U-N force.

Killam Legion Will Canvass For Polio

KILLAM—The 1966 Polio Campaign in aid of the Alberta Chapter of the Canadian Foundation for Poliomyelitis and Rehabilitation will again be sponsored in Killam by the Royal Canadian Legion.

With the aid of various Youth Groups of the community the campaign led by the Legion will be held on Friday and Saturday February 18th and 19th. Citizens are urged to give this worthy appeal their support and to welcome the young people who will be calling upon them for the polio cause

Even though Salk Vaccine and Sabin Vaccine have greatly reduced the number of polio cases in Canada and in Alberta it must be remembered that many were paralyzed in the emedemic of 1953 and still need help. Braces, wheelchairs, iron lungs, rocking beds and other costly equipment is still needed and has to be replaced from time to time. Medical research has still not solved all the problems in connection with those affected by the disease and pyhsiotherapists must be trained and paid to assist in the rehabilitation of victims

The services supplied by the polio foundation in no way duplicates government services available to polio victims. The need is still great in this work. Please assist the campaign

Time For Talk Is Over!

There have been so many wild statements made concerning the movement of grain from country elevators to terminals, from terminals to ships and from farms to elevators during the past few weeks that the average layman hardly knows what to make of it all. The placing of responsibility for the situation that presently exists is a difficult one and so far has not been successfully placed. The CPR has taken most of the blame up to this point, but has been fairly successful in combatting the allegations. The terminals admit they could handle a larger volume than at present, and the elevator agents claim they cannot get the grain moved out, for lack of cars and that even if they could the quota system forbids the handling of any larger volumes.

Whatever the real reasons are for the present situation, they do not hold water so far as the grain producer is concerned. His line of reasoning is as sound as the rock of Gibralter. Canada has committed herself to large foreign sales and has urged the farmer to grow grain in abundance. The grain is there, stored in bins on the farm, the grower is suffering for lack of funds and the entire rural economy is wasting away. Locally we are dependent upon agriculture and as it goes so goes the local economy. There is little doubt that there is a bottle-neck somewhere and it is past time that it was removed and normal conditions restored. It is a sad commentary on national management that such a situation should prevail in a supposedly enlightened society. There has been too much talk and not enough action. Find the cause and then remedy it, and don't tell us it can't be done. We've done greater things than this in our time.

Students Show An Understanding!

There is little doubt that today students are the victims of our society. They are so closely subjected to the whims of modern thinking that they have no choice but to accept learning as dictated by their elders who set policies. While this has its certain drawbacks, it is not altogether a lost cause. A larger percentage of school graduates today cannot spell, read properly, write decently, or have much of an idea where to divide words according to established authorities for the English language, which has become basic rules. While this is true beyond contradiction, there are other areas where today's students surpass those of us educated in former generations. Today's students know more about things in general, for instance, in the social, economic, political and business life of the nation and the world. They are better equipped in these realms to cope with life after school.

One of the basic incentives of western society is the profit system. This is what has created the terrific inducement for business to constantly improve and expand. It has made Canada a prosperous nation.

In a recent survey of graduating high school students, three out of four believe that business cannot function successfully without the profit incentive. They indicate that job security is dependent on profitable business operation, for they say that profit encourages economic growth, creates better job opportunities, greater security and a higher standard of living. Five flits are exactly the incentive we need to keep our economy vigorous and growing.

In this one field these students are showing an insight into the proper functioning of our society, an insight that could well be shared by many of our union leaders, who hold that it is some kind of a sin for business and industry to show a profit.

Someone must provide tools to produce and remain competetive; someone must supply capital to develop natural resources and pay for raw materials. Someone must furnish money to hire skilled employees and capable management, and in our economic system all this money is made available by people who save money and invest it with with the idea of making a profit.

Canada's Cenntenial Next Year!

Next year Canada will be celebrating 100 years of nationhood, and all parts of the country will be doing something just a bit extra to celebrate the occasion. Special trains will travel across country visiting various large urban centres, while smaller caravans will make stops in the less thickly populated sections. New buildings, memorial centres, parks and playgrounds, etc. will be established and dedicated to mark the event, civic holidays will be declared during the year in numerous communities and special cultural and sports days will bring the nation's centennial to public attention.

The Community Press will endeavor to bring to light situations, events and stories of the earlier days in the area throughout the Flagstaff Municipality, and in this respect invites its readers to submit such articles, along with pictures where possible. If you prefer, just give us the details and we'll delve into the story and develop it to something of interest. Stories of pioneers, historical events, the early settlers of the area, are suggestions. Just get in touch with the Community Press and we will take it from there.

—Fifty-Eighth Year of Service—

The Letter Box

EDITOR
THE COMMUNITY PRESS
Sedgewick, Alberta
Gentlemen:

Now that the festive season has passed, I wish to commend you for your public spirited assistance in making Christmas an easier postal operation for all Post Offices patrons and a happier occasion for our patrons who received their cards and gifts for Christmas Day. There was an exceptional volume of mail this year across Canada and on the whole it was handled quickly and efficiently. This would not have been the case if the public were not reminded of the necessity for correct addressing, bundling of mail and early mailing. Your public service announcements on behalf of the Post Office impressed upon the public the importance of these measures.

Our patrons, I know, appreciated and heeded the timely postal reminders you publicized for their benefit during the busy Christmas season. For this service, rendered at a time when your advertisers were most anxious to utilize all news media to full capacity, I am most appreciative. I heartily thank you.

Yours sincerely,
W. H. Wilson
Deputy Postmaster General

by A.C.E.

Saturday night at Hardisty watching the Stamps and Indians play each other once again a few seddion came to me. There was John Golka, an old stalward of the Stamps, but before that an Indian. In the nets for Killam was Ev Mayne who played with the Stampeders before joining the Indians. Eyeing each other from opposite blue lines were Dave Boutin and Gerry Cosico of Lougheed and teammates in the baseball season. Also facing one on opposing defences were the two Muirhead boys from Sedgewick, David with Hardisty and John with Killam. Paul Dion is playing coach of the Stamps and once had the same job with the Indians. Time makes some funny changes.

Mr. Ernest Keehli recently returned from attending a course at the Civil Defence College in Ontario There were 42 taking the course, everyone a working farmer, and representing every province in Canada. After classes these 42 farmers discussed many farm problems and Ernie says many problems are the same everywhere. One thing he soon learned was as a farmer from the eastern coast of Canada telling him that farmers down there could use a tremendous amount of western feed grain if there was only transportation available to move it.

Besides the fact that they play good hockey, there is another reason that the Killam Midgets are in first place in the Eld League They are the most slippery and illusive group of fellows to come along in years. I've been chasing them for over a month trying to get a team picture and in five trips they have always cancelled their games or already played it the night before, sic. I'll get them sometime, but they may be playing with the Indians by then.

When the 27th Parliament opened at Ottawa our high paged M.P.'s immediately got down to the business of political infighting and bickering like a group of ten year old children. Many pensions have wondered when they would grow up and start putting the best interests of Canada at the top of the agenda. Well on Monday, January 31st, they unanimously agreed to pass a motion giving themselves free long distance telephone service from Ottawa to their constituencies and we'll probably be told how good this is going to be for the country. Of course anyone who works as hard as they do and for a mere twenty thousand a year can hardly afford to pay his own telephone bill. If they talk as much on the phone as they do everywhere else its going to cost the tax payers a lot of money.

* MACDUFF REPORT

Growing Old . . .

OTTAWA— The Senate Committee on the aging in its final report based on nearly two years' work may have come up with a means of taking the Pearson Government off an uncomfortable hook.

Recently the Government has survived with the aid of the five-man Social Credit group's votes of non-confidence, one based on the fact that it has failed to give $100 a month old age security payments immediately to everyone aged 65 and over, the NDP demand, and the other that the old age security be raised immediately to $100 at 70 scaling the age down in line with the present government program so that by 1970 it would be payable at 65. This is the Conservative plan.

The former Finace Minister, the Hon. Walter Gordon has estimated that the Conservative demand would mean an additional payment of $850 million a year — an estimate questioned by the opposition — which is an impossible extra burden for any Finance Minister to face without a substantial increase in tax rates. But is has popular appeal on the floors of Commons demonstrated. Many a Liberal M.P. must have realized that he was ignoring the wishes of his constituents in voting to support the Government. He could reasonably support it — and undoubtedly will tell his constituents so at the first opportunity — on the ground that if the nonconfidence vote had carried it would have meant not a single additional nickel for anyone. There would have been two alternatives, another Election—government with less than 120 members supporting it which would have been defeated on the first vote in the House of Commons or another election campaign which would have returned the Liberal Government either with a minority support or a majority.

But the Liberal position on old age pensions is still incomprehensible and the government is looking with more than usual interest at the alternative presented by the Senate committee's report. The committee recommends immediate establishment of a guaranteed minimum income at 65 for all Canadians of 10 years residence. The minimum for the time being would be $1,200 a year for a single person and $2,220 a year for a married couple. A technically competent body would be set up to determine later what these minimums should be and to review them yearly.

The minimum would include net cash income from Old Age Security payments, Canada Pension Plan payments and all other sources except contributions from the family. Those whose income total is less than the minimum would fill out a simple income return which as far as possible would itself income, capital and deductions on the same basis as the income Tax Act. This would mean that only the return from small investments that the applicant might have in real estate or securities would be searched, not the capital asset.

To the extent that income so determined falls below the minimum the applicant would be entitled to a payment from the Federal Government. The cost, after excluding savings in federal payments to old age assistance etc. is estimated to be in the order of $100 million.

The great merit of the plan is that it would take care of the worker retired compulsorily at the age of 65 with little or no private pension and insignificant payments under the Canada Pension Plan. He is caught in a three way squeeze without an earned income, no Canada Pension Plan payments if, for example, he retired last year, and no Old Age Security for another three years.

The need for the guaranteed minimum income and its cost will decrease as the Canada Pension Plan payments increase over the 10-year build-up period. By 1975 new applications would be confined to very low earning groups or those who had had a long period of unemployment in the years before reaching 65.

For the pensioner whose Old Age Security is now or will be his only source of income it would provide an immediate increase in pension payments from $75 a month to $105 a month better than the NDP and Conservatives are demanding.

The Senate Committee has recommended establishment of two councils:

1. A National Council on Social Research. There is a woeful lack of accurate information and the committee found that programs for financial support and care of older people, involving large commitments of public funds were launched with no regard to merit or the wishes and needs of old people.

2. A National Commission on the Aging to co-ordinate planning programs. Ad hoc programs are carried on with no regard to priorities or wise use of scarce funds.

The committee, like the Economic Council of Canada, is critical of Federal-Provincial training programs under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and suggests that they be examined to determine whether they are adequate and to find ways of adapting them to the needs of the working population over 45 years. A National Employment Service effort to develop lay-off procedures that will not cause employment prospects for older workers is urged.

Health and housing needs for the aging have occupied a large section of the lengthy report and include a recommendation that all nursing homes be licensed and supervised. This has already been done in British Columbia and is about to be done in Ontario. Particular stress is laid on home run on a non-profit basis, it is suggested, should be brought under the Federal housing program as well as home care programs.

Half the older people in Canada own their own homes or are wives of home-owners and the majority of them are mortgage free. The quality of the dwellings, however, is far below average. The committee asks for improved provision for loans to older people for (a) necessary repairs and (b) alterations which would allow residence of rental revenues. Home improvement loans are often not available to older people with small incomes.

SUGAR AND SPICE

A WINTER WEEKEND

Winter is delight to the young a bit of a horror for the old, and a blasted nuisance for the rest of us.

Yet even for me, one of the most violent winter-haters in the last category, there are moments when it has mysterious charm that cannot be duplicated at any other season.

Today is one of them. Nope, it's not one of those sparkling, crunchy, sky-blue winter days which to me but a complete misanthrope could fail to enjoy. It's just the opposite.

It's one of those brooding, winter days when the shadow of the great monster of the north hangs low over the shrinking earth, and his icy paw flocks about the walls of the house, seeking a weak spot where he may enter and strangle.

His cold, bleak breath raises snowdrifts that sit silently among the naked, shivering trees. His very presence makes the bleu-green spruce boughs droop, like frightened cattle in a storm. The water of the bay reflects fearfully the slate-grey of his lightless eyes.

Don't be frightened, children. The old spook won't get us. As long, that is, as the stove-wood stack the roads, and we don't run out of fuel, and there isn't a power breakdown.

It's a day for sitting by the fire with a hot noggin, dreaming, shivering deliciously once in a while, as the monster outside gives a snort of frustration that rattles the windows. And that's exactly what I'm doing.

We've been spending the weekend with the grandparents, in the country. It has followed its inevitable pattern. The night we arrived, it blew and it snew in the morning it was still snowing, with a wind getting to 60 miles an hour, piling up the drifts, filling the driveway.

Late in the day, the snow stopped, the wind dropped, and as did the temperature, to a nice round figure — zero Typical visiting winter weekend.

But we care nowt. Flames dance in the fireplace, fairies on the television. Tomorrow is time enough to dig out the car, pray that it will start, and hope the snowplow will get through the side-road.

While the monster prowls outside, all is serene within. Grandad reminisces about winters 20 years ago, when he drove a rural mail route, with team and sleigh Bundled to the ears. Buffalo robes. Snow piled to the top of snake fences. Stopping for lunch in the still shelter of deep spruce woods. Lonely as the Ancient Mariner, on a white, white sea. And home, darkness deepening, to cosy lamplight, snug farm kitchen, hot food, and anxious wife.

While he talks quietly, Granny produces endless pots of tea, cake, sandwiches, chocolates The kids sprawl on the floor, strumming guitars or dreaming. The Old Buccaneer dozes, content for once.

And even yours truly, lulled by the fire and stunned by a huge dinner, admits that there are times when winter can be wonderful.

Butter Price Announcement

(By Agriculture Minister)

Ottawa, January 7, 1966—Agriculture Minister J. J. Greene, today announced that the Agricultural Stabilization Board has increased its selling price for butter by two cents per pound, effective 8 p.m. E.S.T.

Mr. Greene emphasized that this action will have the effect of increasing producers' prices for manufacturing milk and cream by an equivalent amount and should stimulate production, thus bringing about a better balance between supply and demand. He noted that under current pricing schedules insufficient butter is being produced to meet domestic demand.

The Board's purchase price for butter will remain unchanged at its cents per pound for top-quality butter, boxes delivered in store Montreal and Toronto, so will the Government's payment to producers of 38.9 cents per pound of butterfat used in the manufacture of creamery butter.

A HAVEN FOR THE CONG? This is a small fishing village, typical of those dotting the jungles of Cambodia. It looks peaceful . . . but U.S. military observers have grown increasingly concerned that Cambodia has become a haven for Viet Cong troops fighting in neighboring Vietnam, and have warned the Vietnam war could spread to Cambodia. Cambodia has asked Canada, as one of the three members of the International Control Commission, to prepare its borders in its northern area. Maj.-Gen. Alfred Ayre, Minister of National Defence, has replied Canada is willing to participate in any action to protect the territorial integrity of Cambodia.

Fertilizer Is One Of The Best Bargains A Farmer Buys

On the basis of cost comparisons with other inputs in agriculture, fertilizer is still the cheapest item the farmer buys. Years of field tests and farmer experience with cereal crops show that each dollar invested in fertilizer (plant food) will return at least $3.00 in cash income.

More Nitrogen Needed. Reports from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta indicate that soil moisture supplies are well above average in most districts. Soil specialists predict that in most areas there will be enough moisture available to warrant seeding stubble land this spring. However they point out that, owing to cool, wet weather conditions of 1965, the supplies of soil nitrates on stubble and even on summer fallow land are below the amounts usually available. This means, of course, that in 1966 cereal crops sown on stubble will benefit greatly from the application of high nitrogen fertilizers such as 16-20-0 or 23-20-0, or from broadcast applications of nitrogen in addition to application of 11-48-0 at seeding time. This is a year when farmers should not only take advantage of the good soil moisture reserves but use enough fertilizer to compensate for the reduced amounts of soil nutrients, particularly nitrogen. If you want to obtain the most accurate fertilizer recommendation for 1966 have your soil tested.

Concerning Liquid Fertilizers. Tests made by the Soil Science Departments of Universities in Western Canada have shown that applying a liquid fertilizer to the seed of cereal crops is useless. Liquid fertilizers do not supply grain crops with the major nutrients, particularly phosphorous, they need. The use of liquid fertilizers as a seed dressing for cereal crops, or as a spray on established crops of wheat, oats and barley, is a waste of money. It is also not recommended. To obtain profitable increases from fertilizer in 1966 apply a solid fertilizer such as 11-48-0, 16-20-0, or 23-20-0 at the rates recommended for your particular farm or district.

Detailed information on fertilizers can be obtained from Experimental Farms, Universities, Provincial Departments of Agriculture, as well as from qualified agronomists with grain and fertilizer companies. Use fertilizer in 1966. It pays!

Measles Vaccine Available

The Hon. J Donovan Ross, Minister of Health, has announced that measles vaccine will now be available for all children in Alberta who are between three months and three years of age, and who have not had the disease The measles vaccine will be given at clinics to be held throughout the province by City Health Departments, Health Units and Municipal Nursing Services.

Measles vaccine has now been in use in North America on a private basis for two and one-half years and has been shown to be a safe and effective way of preventing measles. Contrary to popular belief measles is not just a simple childhood disease, but one which can have serious consequences. In 1964, in Alberta 9 children died as a result of measles and many others were made seriously ill.

Dr. Ross said that the age group from three months to three years had been selected to receive the vaccine since children in this age group are likely to become seriously ill as a result of measles.

Alberta is the first Province to undertake a program of providing measles vaccine to all young children It is estimated that 80,000 children will be eligible to attend the clinics.

The schedule recommended is three doses of killed vaccine one month apart, followed seven months later by a dose of live measles vaccine Health Department officials said that this schedule provided the best protection for the child and at the same time the best reaction from the vaccine. Killed and live vaccines have been used in combination before in the polio vaccination program where a series of Salk injections, a killed vaccine, is followed by the use of Sabin vaccine (a live vaccine).

Industrial Work Force Back Attending School

More than 1200 apprentices from Alberta's industrial work-force went back to school this week. Apprenticeship courses of three to 12 weeks each continues throughout the year at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology in Edmonton, the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology in Calgary, the Lethbridge Junior College and Vocational School and Fairview Agricultural and Vocational College

Training in 28 apprenticeable trades is available at these technical schools. Students must be registered apprentices under the training program of the Apprenticeship Board. Alberta Department of Labor. Each apprentice undertakes on-the-job experience at his place of employment, as well as classroom and shop training at a technical school for an average eight week period each year during a three or four-year program.

Costs of tuition, transportation and subsistence allowances to apprentices are financed under the provisions of the Federal-Provincial Apprenticeship Agreement. A single person living at home is given a subsistence allowance of $12 a week and a single person away from home $18 a week. A married person maintaining a home is given $24 a week and a married person away from home $24 a week.

Student loans up to $400 a course are available upon proof of need under the Students' Assistance Act of the Alberta Department of Education. Loans are interest free until the completion of apprenticeship when interest at 3 1/2 % becomes chargeable.

In the 30-year development of the apprenticeship program in Alberta, over 11,000 apprentices have achieved journeyman status and received the Completion of Apprenticeship Certificate from the Apprenticeship Board. In 1965, more than 6500 apprentices attended courses prescribed by the Alberta Apprenticeship Board.

Inquiries about apprenticeship training should be directed to local offices of the Apprenticeship Board in Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Red Deer and Grande Prairie.

Dorthy Pritchard & Art Potter Wed At Lougheed

LOUGHEED—The church of the Nazarene was the scene of a pretty winter wedding January 3rd. at 2:00 p.m. when, Dorothy Phyllis daughter of Mrs. Pritchard and the late Mr. Pritchard of Eastern Canada became the bride of Arthur Potter now residing in Prince Rupert B.C.

The Rev. Roy Kenhal performed the wedding ceremony. His solemn prayed a prayer on the newly weds.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father-in-law and looked lovely in a street length gown of lace over bridal satin featuring a fitted bodice, a scooped neck-line and lily-point sleeves. Her only jewelery was a tear-drop necklace of Austrian Borealis and a three tiered head-piece to match. She carried a beautiful bouquet of Cascade Red roses.

The matron of honor was Mrs. Ruth Potter sister-in-law of the groom wearing a green wool double-knit dress complimented with white accessories, and a corsage of pale yellow roses.

The groom was attended by his brother Clifford Potter. With Arthur Lendholm, a friend of the groom ushered.

The wedding music was played by Miss Shireen Wells while Mrs. Leone Lendholm was soloist and rendered the beautiful number "He Thee Their Guide" during the signing of the register.

The groom mother chose a double-knit three piece wool pink suit complimented with black accessories and wearing a corsage of a deep-pink roses.

Following the wedding an open reception was held at the home of the grooms parents, south of Lougheed.

Rev Roy Kenhal proposed the toast to the bride in which the green capably replied.

A Letter From A Marine (Valley Times, Oregon)

His name was Marine Lance Cpl. Michael R. Webb He will be remembered as Springfield Oregon's first casualty of the Viet Nam war . . . killed while on patrol on Jan. 7.

The editor of the Springfield News received a letter from the marine's first sergeant written three days after Webb's death. Enclosed was a letter written shortly before his day conveying his thought to his "People".

1st Sgt. John P. Murray asked the editor to send it to its final destination. "Cpl. Webb could not mail this letter personally, as he was killed in action against the enemy . . . ."

Webb explained that, "I am writing this letter in reply to the recent controversy in the U.S. as to our present war here in Viet Nam. I understand that in several colleges across the land that students of my general age group (18) are demonstrating and protesting the war in Viet Nam . . . . !"

Webb wrote: "The situation here in Viet Nam, I feel, is grossly misrepresented to the people of our country. We, the fighting men of our nation, have been called murderers of women and children, mad dogs, and various other names that do not fit us, nor our goal. For more women and children have been slaughtered by Viet Cong because they simply would not co-operate with the cause of the V.C. Far more Viet Cong mortars and machine guns make innocent villagers their targets than they make targets of marines and soldiers of Viet Nam and our fighting men.

"I have seen many a young marine tired and hungry, give his last can of rations to starving women and children. I have seen the same marine use up the last of his iodine and bandages to cover the open sores of a small child who hasn't the knowledge or education to do so for himself, even though he is cut and bleeding from the jungle himself. I have seen the looks of gratitude and thankfulness from women who are nearing their childbirth and the same looks from old men who know that their grandchildren can look for a better life than they have led.

"We are not murderers or mad dogs Remember us, we are the kids on the block a few years ago . . . the paper boys, the kids who used to cut your grass on Saturday morning for a quarter We are the baseball, basketball and football players in your high schools a few short years ago.

"The young marine concluded: "Stand behind these men you have chosen . . . stand behind us of the armed forces. Our cause is just For the first time in decades an enslaved nation can look for a life without fear. They look for peace and freedom. We won our own freedom in war. Let us not be cowardly or too self-concerned to become hypocrites and let still another nation fall to Communism.

"We are willing to fight for freedom Will you stand with us?"

Strong Economic Growth This Year

MONTREAL—Prospects are good for continued strong economic growth in the year ahead, Major General R. H. Keefler, President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said today in a round message. He cautioned, however, that increasing efforts will be needed to hold costs in line if Canada's longer term competitive position is to be maintained.

The upswing which began back in March of 1961 has been the longest and most sustained peacetime expansion on record, said the Chamber President. In terms of most of the major measures of economic performance—output, employment, profits, and sales, the performance of the economy in 1965 has been a source of satisfaction.

General Keefler said the large capital spending programs, and the growth in our exports of goods and services, have been among underlying reasons for strong expansion in our economy. Europe is very dependent on the international environment, he continued. In this connection, balance of payments problems in the United States and the United Kingdom, our main trading partners, and other countries as well, have not been helping Canada's situation. This country's big export account declined with the U.S. last in the past boom covered by an inflow of capital, primarily from the U.S. — and from a trading surplus with other countries. With these countries having balance of payments problems, "this traditional offsetting cover is becoming more and more difficult to obtain."

"In order to help balance our international accounts, it is clear that everything possible must be done to keep our trade channels open," said General Keefler. "Business itself has taken considerable initiative, and a series of trade and economic conferences under Chamber auspices has recently been completed with leading businessmen in the United States, the United Kingdom and Japan."

General Keefler said that in an economy now operating at or close to capacity, the inflation threat should be watched.

"We are experiencing rising labour costs, shortages of skilled labour, price increases, tighter credit, strongly rising imports and a flattening in the upward curve of exports, he said. "If allowed to continue unchecked, all this can add up to an alarming price spiral. Our economic position depends in large measure upon the quality and cost of our products, and in this competitive world we must make sure that we do not price ourselves out of the market."

President Keefler said the level of taxation also could be a factor bearing on our ability to compete. Important tax reforms have been held up pending receipt of the report of the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation. It is to be hoped that 1966 will be the year in which Canada will get tax policies which will promote development and employment, and stimulate the flow of savings into the most fruitful investment channels

Looking to the immediate future, General Keefler held that governments should pay much more attention than has been paid up to now, to the question of priorities. The continuous pressure for additional facilities and services, more welfare, better education, training and retraining of the labour force, poses a need for evaluation of priorities among the desirable objectives in relation to the economy's ability to pay for them

General Keefler concluded by saying that we need a growing sense of national unity if we are going to achieve national greatness. Among other things, this calls for improved understanding between the two founding races and an appreciation of the multi-cultural aspect of Canada, close co-operation between the various levels of government, initiative and enterprise by businessmen, and farsighted labour management relations

Tourists Interview Professor

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

I managed to get an interview with a Farm Management professor at one of the Agricultural Colleges. From him I found out why there are so many Jersey Cows. Mainly parents of their better and cheese is exported, mostly to Britain, and the farmer is paid strictly on the butterfat content. The balance is consumed domestically, enabling the "Native" to purchase some of the very inexpensive imports of T.V. sets, so the price will probably rise again. Currently a very plain 21-inch portable sells at $300. Can't comment on console prices as we never saw one for sale.

Viet Nam Situation — In spite of what you hear at home, both New Zealand and Australia have troops in Viet Nam and are determined to keep them there. New Zealand has a draft law whereby every able-bodied male serves three months of intensive military training and then becomes a part of the reserves. Employers must keep their positions open for them while they are on duty.

Employment — 100% full employment according to one economist here, and this is strictly statistical. The government will hire anyone who is unemployed and give him a shovel to lean on rather than pay him to do nothing. Taxable income starts at $300 for a single person, so smile and think how well off you are on April 30th. Farmers here do have some advantages over the wage earner, but not so great as at home. In a bad summer year they may keep surpluses with the reserve bank for two summers and then pay tax on a deferred basis when they collect it again in a low income year. However most just don't bother making money and are not producing at the possible capabilities. Meanwhile the farmers' worries because it can't export enough to meet its trade deficit.

My interviews were arranged for me by members of the Haldam family here in New Zealand, and both have been in Saskatoon on farms in previous years. Their hospitality and help is greatly appreciated.

In our seven weeks here we have seen almost every corner of the country and formed a very definite impression of the land. It is a lovely, pleasant land and its natural beauty is enhanced by the magnificent parks located in the cities. It "identifies" very closely with the Commonwealth, and it always surprises us when someone asks us "how we like our Social Credit Government in Alberta," and "is the Quebec situation as bad as we hear it is?" It is also startling to hear a New Zealand born person speak of Britain as home. The whole world should look at racial integration as practiced here. It is not 100% perfect, but it is primarily an educational defect in the native population. Socialists should also come here and take a good long look and ask themselves if a country can really afford this luxury at the expense of what others take for granted in this the 20th century

We are now on our way to Australia, and crossing the Tasman Sea which is noted for being rough. Yesterday it was very smooth sailing, and according to the crew was the smoothest crossing they have ever had. However it is sure making up for it today, with high waves and lots of roll to the ship. As yet we haven't missed a meal but there were lots of vacancies in the dining [illegible] at lunch time.

We have received in our mail a few questions about New Zealand that will be easier to answer in the paper than by individual letters.

T.V. reception is very good as they broadcast using more visual lines to the inch than we do in Canada. This eliminates a majority of the "snow" in the picture. All broadcasting is done by the N.Z.B.C. which is the equivalent of the C.B.C. and there is only one channel available. Service has only recently been expanded so that all the major cities have reception. Content of the programs is very similar to that at home (canned American programs). Legislation which became effective on New Year's Eve prevents the import of T.V. sets, so the price will probably rise again. Currently a very plain 21-inch portable sells at $300. Can't comment on console prices as we never saw one for sale.

Unemployment Insurance

Housing —In short supply for renting. Most people own their own home on a mortgaged basis. A good brick is used as it is the same price as wood. A typical size home is 1200 square feet floor area with no basement or central heating. Usually have two fireplaces. Price is about $20000 less than in Canada. Most are built by small contractors and then they avoid being a large number of houses which look exactly alike. Wages are all extremely well kept by paying two-thirds of the new salary. Overtime is discouraged because although the wage earner [illegible] time & [illegible] days) he pays a higher tax on any income earned this way. One result from this is the impossibility of getting a meal after 7:00 p.m. Wages are low and top salary received is construction work (the highest paid occupation) would be $380 a month basic pay. Fully qualified teachers receive $380 a month at top pay.

Liquor and Associated Laws: Bars shut promptly at six p.m. Because you are a paying guest in the hotel, and then you may drink until dawn All types of alcohol are sold in the parlors although beer consumption is encouraged in hotels owned by breweries. Prices are as we never saw one for sale.

Beer is served in 9-Oz. bottles and is much sweeter than ours. I didn't fancy it but could acquire a taste. Stringent laws are a result of many years of minority government and hope in power by a small faction in both parties who are extremely opposed to alcohol in any form. This has now changed, but laws remain the same, merely because they are not enforced. Any resident who is known may smuggle through the back door for the owning.

Legislature Opens Today!

e Alberta Legislature opens y, the third session of the enth Legislature. One of most talked about pieces of slation to be introduced wil he Bill to give a $50 discount some-owners on his property bill. We can think of a lot of e we would sooner receive gift" of this kind (if gift it be called). It is still logical believe that you simply can- give somebody something thout getting it back in some y. Governments must still ve revenue to carry on and the most popular seems to be via taxation. If this Bill passes, it will cost Alberta something and residents of the Province will most likely have to find the sum, or more, through additional levies, or through curtailment of services. In this day and in this age, the latter seems the least acceptable. Other proposed legislation, which will be welcomed by all, will modernize the City, Town and Village, and the Municipal Acts, the Tax Recovery and Assessment Acts, all of which are far out of date.

Education In Human Behavior!

For an economical education human behavior all one has to ... is subscribe to Hansard, the ficial report of proceedings in the House of Commons. Every ord uttered by all members is recorded in this little publica- on which will reach your desk ery morning once the session is und.r way. Not only does it ep you thoroughly up to date federal activities, it gives a ear insight into the thinking of the men and women we pay handsomely to conduct our airs. For the serious minded here is a lot of heavy reading, et the pages are sprinkled ith a kaleidoscopic compilation of humanities and insults ordering on the ridiculous. One could almost get the impression hat to say anything really ser- ious is frowned upon, and any- one who attempts to do so finds himself the object of jest. One expects such things at the circus but certainly the House of Com- mons should appear to the pub- lic as a more dignified institu- tion than that. No doubt Han- sard is not widely read by Can- adians, for if it were, there would surely be a storm of pro- test over the childish antics of the members. Hansard is a valu- able publication and it is recom- mended to everyone. You can keep pace with the serious as- pects of our way of life; you can get a real chuckle when en- tui takes hold of your life, but perhaps, more than anything else, you will get a real educa- tion in human behavior.

Get|Off Our Backs!

Unions in North America, while they appear to have the public at their mercy, are fight- ing a losing battle to control the minds of members. Irresponsi- bility in unreasonable demands on industry, coupled with the orders to cease work via strike methods, has alienated the af- fections of many union mem- bers, who feel that the obliga- tion to keep home and family running smoothly, outweighs that owing to union bosses who sit in swivel chairs, waxing rich and more overbearing. Union bosses have no right to picket industry and prevent anyone wanting to work, from doing so. Yet this is exactly what is hap- pening today. That this is gett- ing through to many union members is clearly shown by the increasing numbers who are de- fying orders and crossing picket lines. That they should be allow- ed to do so, is a public responsi- bility. Our youth today is being taught in our schools that our courts are to be respected, but unions feel they can defy an in- junction properly issued by the courts. If defiance of a court is rebellion, then failure to put down rebellion is a resignation of the sovereignty of the state. Picketing is legally provided only for the information of the public, not the obstruction of the public or of anyone wanting to enter his place of employ- ment. It is past time unions got off the back of the public.

Why Not Tell It All?

Pierre Burton is an egoistical smart aleck. So said a neighbor of ours the other day. We agree. He's a smart aleck, but a smart, smart aleck. He knows what to say to get people to talk about Burton, and that's an important thing for any writer, interview- er or entertainer. In saying things which he probably does not fully believe himself, he has the uncanny ability to stir up controversy the result of which makes him the apparent win- ner. Once in a while he comes up with something that is not anti- social, not controversial, and has a smattering of good com- mon-sense. But for the most part he's always looking for trouble. One of his most recent tirades had to do with television. In blasting the independent net- work as a profit-seeking low calibre institution, he made the CBC appear as a gilded angel on the horizon of commercialism. But what Burton failed to dis- close is the fact that the CBC is subsidized to the tune of close to a hundred million dollars of public funds, while the private network must rely on revenue from advertising as the sole means of continuing operations. He also failed to say that in many respects the CBC has an odor that reaches the nostrils of people from coast to coast. Nor did he mention that the CBC is run by a little dictator of whom even the government is appar- ently afraid. Yes, Burton forgot to mention quite a few things that could have made his article at least interesting. It would al- most appear that he too lacks the intestinal fortitude to give the CBC the dressing down it deserves.

ABOUT MOST ANYTHING

by A.C.B.

Daysland recently started using water from the new municipal water system installed this past year. Mayor Allen Pryor tells me that many people are surprised at just how much water they use in a day around a home or business. Water is one of the many things that people never think about or appreciate until it is suddenly not available or is in short supply.

A number of people have asked how we at the Press know what's going on in the House of Commons. The answer is very simple. An official report of debates in the Commons is issued the morning following each day's sitting, containing the speeches in English as delivered, and the English translation of speeches given in French. This report is known as "Hansard" and is available to the public by sub- scription at a cost of $2.00 per annum. At the back of each is- sue is an index which lists the subjects discussed and names of all who took part in the debates in this way you can find out what, if anything your own member, or any other member is doing or not doing.

Last week the Hardisty Stam- pede Assn. held their annual meeting, and Mr. Ken Drever told the following story, which he swears is true. It seems that the Hardisty Ball Team was in a tight game and ran out of pitch- ers. Coach Eddie Weidner sent his players over and decided that John Goltz was the man for the job. Goltz, who is a left- stitch resulted in a single, the second pitch in another single, and the third pitch in a double, scoring two runs. Eddie called time and asked catcher Les Hen- dricks, "Has John got anything on the ball?" Back came the an- swer, "How would I know, I haven't caught one yet".

Looking back in the files of the Community Press I noticed a couple of items that show how the farm problems change. In 1926 the Editor said that there was then some 18,000 acres in crop in the Sedgewick district, and there was a desperate need for "an" elevator. In 1946 the elevator agents were crying for more grain to satisfy the market. Now in 1966 we have the elevat- ors and the grain, and everyone is looking for buyers to trans- port it. The problem is still to get the grain to the customers, but the obstacles seem to shift with the years.

THE WEAKNESS IN ALBERTA POLITICS

It seems certain that there will be a provincial election in Alber- ta this year. It also seems reas- onably certain that the Social Credit government will be re- turned to power.

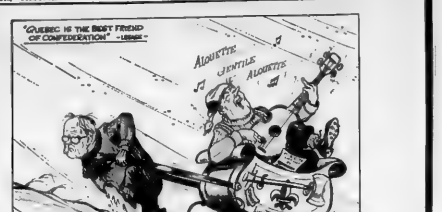
The government has benefitted greatly from the development of oil and natural gas resources and has distributed money lavishly. There is no sales tax in Alberta and municipal taxes have been kept down by generous govern- ment grants.

The one obvious weakness in the government's side is its over- whelming majority in the legisla- ture. Traditionally, in a legislature of 63 members there are 30 on the government side and only 6 in the opposition.

Social Credit leaders say that such a situation is due to the overwhelming popularity of the government. But that is not exactly true.

When the Social Credit govern- ment gained power the elections were conducted on a transferable system. That means the voters could vote on their 1, 2, 3 or more choices. And the Social Credit government threw out that sys- tem of voting later on.

Now there are at least four po- litical parties in the field and the split voting gives the party in power a tremendous advan- tage There would be a stronger opposition in the Alberta legisla- ture and men can be obtained only through the transferable voting system. —Brooks Bulletin



★ MACDUFF REPORT

Sweet Revenge

OTTAWA — The committee is over for Defence Minister Paul Hellyer. He has come in for lav- ish praise in the press for the job he has done on integration. The opposition parties have sat back and done little to start shooting holes in the power slippage.

But now, in this session of the new parliament, he has come under vigorous criticism. The attack was launched by Opposi- tion Leader John Diefenbaker. It was picked up by Mr. Diefenbak- er's former Minister of Defence, Douglas Harkness and carried on by another former Minister of Defence, Gordon Churchill. The New Democratic Party and Social Credit group, have joined in the attack.

The word from the Tory back- benchers is that Mr. Hellyer will come in for increasing attention in this session. Mr. Harkness and Mr. Churchill have been saying reports that made them more than a bit unhappy over the state of morale in the armed forces. They will start prodding and prying for additional infor- mation.

They want to know if the Can- adian forces are in such a state of readiness that they would be able to carry out all of Canada's commitments. They are suspic- ious that the shortages of train- ed manpower are becoming so critical that this country will have to back away from some of its defence commitments.

It would be more revenge for the Conservatives if they could blast the Liberal administration for allowing such a state. They have not forgotten that one of the factors that led to the downfall of the Diefenbaker Government was the Grit policy on nuclear weapons.

The Liberals launched an all- out assault on the Tory adminis- tration in these days. They de- nounced its policy on the "un- armed Bomarcs" and trumpeted from the spires of Parliament that the Canadian forces should not carry out their commitments under NATO. The resignation of Mr. Harkness from the defence portfolio, added strength to the Liberal assault.

Now the Conservatives are be- ginning to fire back with some of the ammunition they have been collecting about the state of the armed forces under the Liberal Government. Mr. Hell- yer was on his feet frequently during the first weeks of this new session.

One of the decisions he was called on to defend was the choice of the Northrop CF-5 Freedom Fighter for a NATO ground support role. Later he was explaining a shortage of technical personnel in the forces. And again he was called on to provide explanations for the big turnover of trained pilots in the Royal Canadian Air Force, when it was only two years ago that 200 aircrew were compulsorily retired because flying jobs could not be found.

The questions over the Canad- ian decision to acquire the CF-5 fighter stemmed largely from a Canadian Press report that the United States Air Force had de- cided against buying the aircraft. The Americans made their decis- ion after tests of the plane in Viet Nam.

The Canadian Defence Depart- ment will spend $315,000,000 to obtain 125 Canadian built CF-5's (C is for Canadian). The first fighters are to come off the Can- adair assembly line at Montr- real next year The defence pro- duction department in Canada and the Canadair aircraft indust- ry had hoped to get in on any follow-up orders for the CF-5 both for the United States and other countries. The U.S. decision is a blow to these hopes. When Mr. Hellyer originally announced that the CF-5 he came vigorously to the defence of the new aircraft. He said, "my operators" informed him that below 20,000 feet it is the best aircraft in the world and will do the job for the Can- adian armed forces in the most satisfactory manner.

The Defence Minister explain- ed that the U.S. defence author- ities had not intended to buy the F-5 because the American re- quirements are not the same as Canada's. He contended that the Viet Nam trials showed the air- craft was an outstanding air- plane with the lowest attrition rate, the most success in the number of sorties and the lowest operational cost. He contended that it was a "wonderful air- plane" and added that the oppos- ition members should "rejoice".

But the opposition is not going to be put off quite so easily this session. Mr. Harkness cited re- ports that the CF-5's had been a failure. But Mr. Hellyer denied such re- ports. The C.P. carried a report quoting the authoritative U.S. trade magazine Aviation Week. It said that the Freedom Fighter had to be refuelled 16 times in the air and make two pre-ground stops during its 10,500 mile trip from Arizona to Saigon last Oct. It said the combat trials had pin- pointed advantages and limita- tions, ont of the latter being that the plane needs a lot of run- way to take off with a "moder- ate" bomb load. This is more runway than required by an Air Canada DC-4 passenger jet.

In the Commons questions were also raised about a short- age of pilots for the air force. The Defence Minister said his Department is worried about the stepped-up drive by U.S. airlines to recruit experienced RCAF pilots. Officials in the Defence Department report that the de- mand for commercial airlines pilots in the U. S. and abroad is running about 6000 annually. One American airline alone is report- ed seeking 750 pilots this year.

With a shortage of pilots loom- ing some 110 flight lieutenant pilots in the RCAF due to retire in 1967 have been offered two year extensions in flying jobs. The Air Force shortage is devel- oping after the service was fully integrated out of the services. The defence officials explain that it was not foreseen at that time that the airline business would boom to the extent it has.

The same applied to the acute shortage of technical personnel in the armed forces. Social Cred- it Leader Robert Thomp s on wanted to know what was being done about that situation. Mr. Hellyer agreed that there was more difficulties. He said the armed forces were having the same trouble competing for manpower as every other organization is ex- periencing in Canada in these boom times.

Hardly had the defence minis- ter weathered those attacks in the Commons than the report of the Auditor General A. M. Hen- derson was tabled in the House. It contained several severe criti- cisms of defence spending. It was carefully filed away for fut- ure reference by the opposition defence critics.

They are waiting for the House Defence Committee to be consti- tuted as they can then get exam- ination of the effects and impact of integration of the armed forc- es. The Defence Minister too would welcome the committee study as it would give him an op- portunity to set forth the govern- ment's side of the story — a pic- ture that Mr. Hellyer believes will reflect credit on the Govern- ment.

No Complaints Received On 1965 Hardisty Assessment

HARDISTY— It would appear that ratepayers in Hardisty are quite satisfied with property assessment, as Council found at their meeting in February that it was not necessary to hold a Court of Revision as no complaints had been received.

A copy of "The statement of comparison of actual operation to budget for the year ended Dec. 31, 1965" prepared by the auditors, was presented to each councillor. The audit report and a synopsis by the Sec.-Treas. were presented and approved.

Any action on By-Laws 427 and 428 was ordered held up, as a petition signed by 70 property owners had been received against By-Law 427 in case there is a petition against 428, it also was ordered held over.

Part of the N.E. of 26-42-10 was leased to James Schatz to the end of 1966. Part of the S.E. 1-43-10 was leased to R. S. Young for 1966 in the understanding that Mr. Young will release same to the Stampede Assn. when they require it.

The council requisitioned the Chief Provincial Assessor for an Assessor for 1966, to complete an annual assessment. They asked that the appointment of A. Duncan for this job be approved.

Certain lots in the Town will be offered for sale under the Tax Recovery Act, and the date for the sale was set for Thursday, March 31st at 2:00 p.m. at the Secretary's office.

Cr. Young presented a financial statement for the Hardisty Arena Assn., showing receipts and payments to date, along with a list of payments required by March 31st. He was asked to present a further statement for the March meeting.

It was brought to the attention of the meeting that AGT would hold a program in the school on Feb 17th at 7:30 p.m.

That the Town of Hardisty may have some new sidewalks this year was detailed by the fact that the Alberta Municipal Financial Corporation is to be notified that there is a possibility that the Town of Hardisty will require to borrow $30,000 for this purpose.

Tabled to the March meeting were: Feasability Report on Natural Gas; Timing device for the Town Siren; Night circulation of [illegible]

The annual meeting of the Town of Hardisty will be held Monday, February 28th at 8:00 p.m.

Hardisty apparently has the same problems as other towns, as a letter was received from the staff of the school complaining about dogs running at large. They request ed enforcement of regulations in this respect. That something may be done was indicated by the fact that the matter was referred to Constable Robert for action.

FLAGSTAFF AUXILIARY HOLDS FEBRUARY MEETING AT LODGE

SEDGEWICK—The members of the Flagstaff Lodge Auxiliary met at the Lodge on the evening of Feb 7. The roll-call was answered with a Chins Cup and Saucer. These cups and saucers are for the use of the Lodge guests for afternoon tea.

Mrs. Streski informed the ladies that the materials, ordered last month for occupational therapy, had arrived and the guests were busy making various articles. A lovely Shellcraft rug has already been made. The small washboard, drying rack and Featherweight Traveling Iron which has been provided is much appreciated by those who wish to do their personal laundry.

The next meeting will be held March 7 at 8:00 p.m. at the close of the meeting Mrs. J. Hallum served a dainty lunch.

HOW THE DAYS GO

"It's not the cough wot carries you off. It's the coffin they carry you off in."

That old English folk saying pretty well sums up my attitude toward life this week. It isn't the work that's killing me; it's the after-hours stuff, in a typical week.

Last Monday, after work, I wrote my column, then spent five hours studying an essay by C. S. Lewis, concisely called "Right and Wrong as a Clue to the Meaning of the Universe." In selling that one to a girl whose chief worry is her hairdo, or to a boy who can hardly wait for the last bell to ring, so that he can streak for the poolroom.

Tuesday night I went curling. First time this year. Next morning, I felt 112 years old when I crawled out of the sack. My muscles worked only in fits and starts.

Wednesday afternoon, rushed to matinee to see movie of Macbeth. Sat with doo-eyed female English teacher. Later told my daughter I'd held hands with her throughout the show. Daughter furious. Wednesday night, a two-hour meeting of our staff's Grants-in-Futility Committee.

Thursday afternoon, a two hour drive to the city, through a yielding snow-storm with Kim, her last (thankfully!) visit to the orthodontist. Five years and 700 dollars after it all began the kid has straight teeth.

Two more hours home, the transport trucks giving us a mud-bath about every two miles. But we had a jolly conversation, in the cozy car, in the black night, in the white wilderness. Talked about four-letter words, their origin and their fascination. We agree they were ugly but powerful. Not the dirty ones. They reveal merely a limited vocabulary. But such epithets as slop, drab, slob, clot, punk, jerk, fish, have a certain horrible charm.

Friday night is relax night, the week over. I curled again, and later got into a session one of those "Kids don't know how lucky they are today" sessions with some other creaky relics of the Depression. I also got hell when I got home. But not to worry. Tomorrow I could sleep in.

Tomorrow arrived, about 30 winks later, and the Old Girl, still a bit surly, informed that she wasn't up to driving the kid to the city for music lesson. I was thrust into the snow and ice. She slept in.

Hugh was to come home with us, for a weekend's skiing. He didn't show up at the rendezvous. We went to his mom's residence. Nobody had seen him since eight o'clock the night before. With some faint hope that he's either eloped or been kidnapped, Kim and I struck out for the long, dreary drive home.

Momma is all rested up, and informs me that we're going out to spend the evening with some new friends Goons. It was exhilarating but exhausting, four of us talking at once. Left at 3 a.m., clutching a delicious homemade coffee cake.

Sunday was church, curling in the afternoon, and a special treat in the evening — drove rehearsal for an annual pageant in the church. I am in charge of rounding up sufficient bodies, of the right size and shape.

Have you ever tried to deliver 25 reluctant teenage boys to a church on a Sunday evening in this day and age? Don't.

St. Joseph had agonized his ankle, sliding, and couldn't make it. St. Peter had the flu. St. Andrew just didn't bother showing up. St. Thomas had to go out of town with the boredom hockey team. St. Paul thought the rehearsal was next week. The shepherds have lost their crooks. The three wise men are two sleepy kids who want to get home and watch Bonanza. Judas is sure because he's just learned he's the villain in the piece.

And you grops off to work in the dark Monday morning. And you come home and look at the mail, two whopping insurance premiums, a fuel bill that makes you want to run for the nearest travel agency, and a notice from the bank that your account is overdrawn.

Oh well, it's a great life if you don't die from sheer living.

POLIO DRIVE AT SEDGEWICK

The Ladies Aux. to the Royal Canadian Legion canvassed the town on February 9, then met back at the Hut for their regular monthly meeting.

The sum of $158.04 was turned in with still a few houses to be called on. Public support makes the task much more pleasant. The Treasurers report showed a fair balance though we have spent a considerable sum on drapes, etc. for the Hut.

Sisters Clara Lossens Lougheed, Lillie Lien Lougheed, Emma Grove Lougheed, Edna Lund Victoria B.C. and Cora Lien of Canmore. Brothers, Luther Vancouver B.C Elmer Lougheed, Albert Fairview Alta., Olaf Merritt B.C. 14 Grand children and numerous other relatives. She was predeceased by her parents in the 1930's, brother Oscar 3 years ago and 2 brothers and 2 sisters in the early years of homesteading here at Lougheed.

She came here from Minnesota with her parents Chas. and Lena Ness by covered wagon train from Wetaskiwin, in 1895 together with Bergsetha and Lorenzo. It was soon after their arrival here at the Homestead that 3 brothers and a sister were fatally stricken by Scarlet Fever. Medical aid was at a distance in those days. Their Doctor came in from Leduc by cutter on a bicycle.

In the gradual passing of our old timers, it brings to mind that they must have been of "Good Stock" as the Ness family were certainly many in the pioneering and settling of this great country.

Mabel was married to Swerre Ness in 1918 and resided on the farm north of Lougheed. She was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church and Trinity Ladies Aid since its organization in the early 1920's.

Correspondents Land In Australia

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondent)

Dear Art:

Will try and finish answering the questions about New Zealand.

FOODS — Restaurants have very dull menus. You may order steak (rump or sirloin) with or without onions; tomatoes or eggs. OR Fillet "Snapper" (tastes like our Halibut) They are always served with two types of potatoes. French fried and mashed, and a beet root salad Menus are a la carte, so coffee and tea are extra at 15c each cup. The coffee is usually instant, and always served with half hot milk unless you remember in time to yell black Hotel meals were usually better if you could find ones which catered to other than paying guests They usually included roast mutton or beef, and the coffee was percolated. Meals usually cost $1.20 to $1.50, but dinner had to be eaten by 7.00 p.m.or you went hungry.

FRUITS which are found peculiar are Guavas. Shaped and designed like a tomato, consistency of the peach and tastes like oranges and bananas mashed together Chinese Gooseberries, shaped like a leg, 6 to 4 inches in length and 1 inch diameter and covered with fine hair. When we were first served one, we didn't know what to do with it so left it. Have since found out that you slit it and scoop out the seeds. Grapefruit, the size of an orange, and very bitter. Formerly imported from Australia but are now trying to grow their own. A grave mistake unless they can find a better variety in the very near future

Pie is never available as we know it. Always turns out to be a meat pie by some other name. Pumpkins are grey in color and always served as a vegetable. The Marrows are also served this way.

In horses mutton is the principal meat, although lamb was in season when we were there. All parts are used. In Butcher Shops you can buy tripe (stomach), sweetbread (pancreas) and brains. "Lamb's Fry" consists of the liver, kidneys, etc., and commonly served for breakfast. Sausages are a lamb sausage encased in a red skin and boiled. We tried them but found them rather tasteless. Whole pig heads are available, which are boiled and eaten somehow; probably while you're in an hypnotic trance

Bread is very heavy as flour is made primarily from soft winter wheat To offset this disadvantage, bread is sliced very, very thinly, about 1 3 the size of our slice However, as you can imagine what would happen to it when toasted, they do put out a spiced loaf called Hinki or Hini.

Meal schedule is: On rising, a cup of tea, followed by breakfast and tea at 10 a.m.; biscuits and tea at 12 00, lunch and tea (main meal of the day) at 3 00 p.m.; sandwiches and tea at 6.00, TEA (light lunch and tea), and supper (cake and tea) just before retiring. The in-between teas are called "cuppa".

CARS are so old and expensive and small, because it is extremely difficult to get new ones into the country. Tariffs are 70 percent of the value of the car in the country of origin If it is produced in the U K or Australia, and 120 percent of the value if they are produced anywhere else, plus 11 percent (of total value) for sales tax. Only a certain value of cars may be imported yearly, allegedly to save on money going out of the country. However to purchase a new car you must pay for it, hand your "overseas" funds. This means you can't use New Zealand currency to buy a new car in New Zealand. Most people get around this by buying Australian shares on the New Zealand stock exchange, then giving them to relatives in Australia, who then deposit an equal value in Australian money in an Australian bank, for them. The whole procedure is legal, complicated, and defeats the purpose of the scheme Prices of the vehicles are fixed by law and there is no competition among dealers. Anyone who purchases a new car, cannot sell it to anyone for a year, and when it is sold it cannot be sold for more than he paid for it.

Japanese cars are not sold as the Government refused to license new dealers while, while Japan does not buy New Zealand products. Thus cars are very expensive. But if the laws of supply and demand were in use, they would be even more expensive until everyone was driving a reasonably new one. We noticed one 1961 Chevrolet advertised for $600, and a 1941 Anglia "needs some front end work — will sacrifice for $150 00 Such ads are common

It makes you wonder what's wrong with the economy, and will it ever catch up to modern day standards.

January 24th

We landed in Sydney on January 20th height and early. Went through immigration check on the boat at 6 30 a.m. This is mandatory for all passengers including those who were in transit and only in Sydney because the boat was there We weren't allowed on shore until all had been checked We managed to get our baggage through customs with a minimum of fuss and bother and arranged with the motor association to get our car off and cleared. This took a lot of running about on their part and an extreme number of signatures on my part. We finally got our car at 4 00 p.m. the next day They drove our car across downtown Sydney for us, which was much appreciated Friends we made or the Canberra going to N Z. had arranged a motel for us, and packed us up

Sydney has a large population of 2.6 million It is interesting to note that 38 percent of all Australians live here and another 25 percent in Melbourne.

The harbour is one of the first real colonies in Australia The first was at Botony Bay but was moved to Port Jackson because of water a year later Sydney today includes Botony Bay in its area and is so large that they give two weather forecasts for the city; one for the downtown area and one for the suburbs 25 miles away. The metropolitan area has large tall buildings some of which are extremely modern, but many narrow streets which seem to wander at will Residents generally consider the city was not planned but just grew and followed the cow paths. We agree It gives the city flavor but not a pleasant one. Everything you could wish to buy is allegedly available here including a very exciting nite life. Every type of food is available because there are a large number of European migrants here and foreign languages are common Different to N Z. where white English speaking people only are encouraged to settle. Both countries however only allow whites to emigrate.

We toured their Zoo one day It was a pleasant day, but a tremendous amount of hill climbing to do. Most interesting were their native animals. We were quite surprised to discover they have tree climbing Kangaroos as well as the more conventional type Enjoyed the Kookaburras (native bird). They sound like a convention of happily drunk women having a mild fit of hysterics. It was hard not to laugh with them We also saw about 2 dozen species of snakes common to Australia, only 5 percent of which are considered deadly. Bev said, "that settles it, no more camping for us"

It was rather an important day here when we landed Sir Robert Menzies announced his sudden retirement that morning. He has been Prime Minister since 1949, and was also the leader from 1939-1941 He was a relatively unknown leader who must face the public next Nov. in a general election. We hope Mr. Defenbaker and Mr Pearson noted his reason for retirement. He said, "I am now 71 and I find the burden too heavy for me I feel that at my age I cannot give the government the attention it needs, or the people the government they deserve, so I feel that I should resign and make way for a younger man." Hope Canadian politicians take note and act accordingly. – George and Bev Davison.

ALBERTA FARM PURCHASE BOARD

Farm land valued at over 22,000,000 dollars has been approved for purchase under Alberta's Farm Purchase Credit Act. This represents a credit of approximately $23,100,000 which has been extended by the Board.

K. G. Taylor, Chairman of the Alberta Farm Purchase Board, points out that the policy of providing loans under the Act is to help farmers acquire efficient economic units A loan can be used to make an initial purchase or to enlarge an existing holding.

Mr. Taylor reports that 3,584 applications have been received to date. Of these, 2,733 have been approved, 123 withdrawn and 728 rejected. In most cases the reason for rejection was the lack of operating capital or failure to establish an economic unit with the proposed purchase.

Under the terms of the Act, the purchaser must make a down payment of 20 per cent of the purchase price to the Alberta Farm Purchase Board. Repayment terms on the balance can be extended up to a period of 20 years and the interest rate of 5 per cent includes free life insurance for the amount of the liability. Prepayments will be accepted without notice or bonus. The maximum credit provided by the Farm Purchase Board is $34,000. The total value of land owned and to be purchased cannot exceed $40,000.

According to Mr. Taylor, there are now 71 local committees operating throughout the province, having three municipalities outside the credit plan. These are Acadia Valley, Taber, and Fairview.

To be eligible for a loan, an applicant must be a Canadian citizen or a British subject with good character and credit references. He must be under 55 years of age but not under 21 years. The necessary equipment to farm the land must be available and applicants are required to be, or to become, bona-fide farmers.

Alberta Rat Free Again

Alberta became a rat-free province once more when the few remaining infestations were eradicated last December.

A total of 131 premises were infested with Norway rats in 1965 compared to 216 the year before. All known infestations were exterminated by the fine co-operation of residents, pest control officers and other agencies. More than 2,000 farms, grain elevators and other premises were checked periodically by municipal and provincial officers.

Assistance given to Saskatchewan in their rat control program has been repaid by fewer problems in Alberta. The intensification of our co-ordinated program with Saskatchewan's provincial and municipal authorities has considerably decreased the rat invasion across our eastern border.

Invading rats were held along the 320 mile front from Montana to Cold Lake. About 11 tons of Warfarin dry bait and 1,200 quarts of water soluable bait were used to kill an estimated 27,000 rats.

In the interior of the province an suspected rat cases were investigated but only 2 turned out to be rats. These local problems were dealt with by approximately 320 pest control officers appointed by rural and urban municipalities. It is the vigilance of this network of "spotters" and the co-operation of local residents that has made it possible to keep Alberta rat-free.

Stamps & Commandoes Meet In BRHL Finals

Monday night at Killam in what must go down as one of the most exciting hockey games of the season, the Hardisty Stampeders managed to capture the right to play in the finals.

Right from the opening face-off, both teams played wide open, hard skating hockey that kept the near capacity crowd in a frenzy.

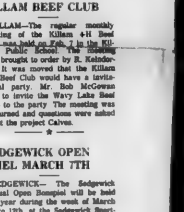
The first period of this game which was scoreless only because of the great goal tending by Mayne and Miller, has to be rated as one of the top periods of hockey in a long time. Players on both teams were giving it everything they had as the play moved at a furious pace but neither side could score as both goalies were unbeatable

Many fans felt that the pace would have to slow down in the second period but the players kept up their all out effort until the final gun ended the game

Stampeders had gradually built up a lead and won the game by a score of 4 to 1.

This gave the Stamps the third victory and series. They had won the previous Monday and Thursday games while the Indians won the Wednesday night game.

Stampeders now play Wainwright in the finals with the first game at Hardisty on Friday night. Further games will alternate between towns on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.



TOP GOALIE—Vern Miller, goalie for the Hardisty stampeders won the goal tending award in the BRHL for having the lowest goals against average in the league. Final league standings are to be released soon.

Common Honesty!

The phrase is interesting — common honesty. It says much about the foundation of mutual trust on which the everyday life of Canadians is built. We set out newspapers in a corner box with a pay slot in one and, back at it works. Men and women with expensively acquired skills give us their services first and bill us afterward. Almost any store will extend credit easily and quickly. The director of the Accounts Department of a large retail establishment says that except for a hard core of deliberate chiselers (perhaps 5% of the clientele) most people are reasonably good risks.

Unhappily, though, dishonesty is not as rare as we'd like to think. There are indications that it is on the increase. Shop-lifting for instance. Prior to Christmas buying spree, merchants expected a heavy wave of pilfering. There was such a demand for security services from firms like Pinkerton's, who keep a watchful eye on slippery-fingered customers, that one newspaper commented, "The private eyes never had it so good." The majority of these petty thieves are women who pick up little items and tuck them into their clothing.

Male dishonesty shows up differently. A repairman offers his customer a discount if he does not care about a receipt. Often the former jumps at the bargain; after all it's only the government that loses. Not long ago a psychiatrist remarked that one of the chief subjects discussed at the parties he attended was how to beat the income tax.

People who wouldn't think of stealing from an individual not only take 'souvenirs' from hotels, deceive Customs Officers, and knowingly break the laws; they boast about it.

Perhaps the stream of 'give-aways' and the 'no down payment' techniques of modern selling are to blame for this blunting of the edge of integrity, but whatever the cause, individuals should take a sharp look at their own habits. We all have a stake in common honesty. Sooner or later, we are the victims if it disappears. It is a precious commodity. Let's not lose it.

Breathalizer Tests!

Tell some people about a road accident — especially if it happens at night — and they make their own diagnosis. Drink.

But people who say "eliminate the liquor and you've eliminated accidents" are wrong, declares K.H. MacDonald, general chairman of Canadian Highway Safety Council.

He told delegates to the Western Farm Safety Conference, that drinking is not as general a problem as some people believe. "We have tens of thousands of people who drive after attending social functions, but they aren't serious danger. They are social drinkers who pace themselves.

"The problem we face is to distinguish between the chronic abuser who is a menace on the road, and the social drinker — usually a responsible, mature citizen who cuts off long before he is impaired.

"And this is why we must have breathalyzer tests," Mr. MacDonald stressed. "The critics complain about intrusion on the rights of the individual, but what about the rights of the innocent?"

Without the breathalizer he said there was no way of proving fully whether the victim's accident was or was not related to alcohol.

Introduction of breathalizer tests with established standards for blood alcohol levels was one item in an eight-point Safety Council improvement described by Mr. MacDonald.

Into Tomorrow!

It is not unreasonable, in view of their background, that Indians and Eskimos should be convinced that in changing over to new ways they are giving up something valuable.

But when offered reasonable opportunity, kindly advice, understanding tolerance, and practical help, all our native people have shown their willingness and desire and ability to make the change.

The issue for tomorrow is this: we newcomers took the the land of the native people. Whether it was a good thing or not; whether it was inevitable in the march of history or not: these are irrelevant. We took their land, disrupted their way of life, ruined their way of livelihood, and undermined their culture. We are challenged to discharge our obligation to them.

What is needed is not primarily entreaty, urging, or exhortation, but understanding help. Over and over again in the course of the world's history, says Jenness in his book, great social and economic advances have been made when two peoples who had marched on separate roads came together. The anniversary of confederation offers an opportunity to enlarge and intensify and hasten our effort to raise the level of life of Canada's native people to that of the general Canadian standard.

ABOUT MOST ANYTHING

by A.C.B.

Watching the hockey games in the BRJHL this past season, it always seemed to be the older and more experienced players who were carrying the play. In the last couple of games, especially the semi-finals between the Indians and Stampeders the new young talent suddenly seemed to stand out. They were skating well, breaking fast, and getting back to help the defence Future seasons can look forward to lots of fine hockey games from these youngsters, and such names as Davies, Rombough, Gair, Burden and Muirhead, and many others are going to become well known in the league.

It seems that from time to time there is a flurry of activity along some line or other Although we have had mutual fund salesmen coming into the district for many years there does seem to be a sudden rapid increase in their numbers and activity. People would be wise to consider these propositions very carefully before handing over their money. These salesmen paint glowing pictures of what their investments have done and try to lead you to believe that this performance will automatically continue in the future There is no guarantee of this, no matter what they would like you to believe. Most of them also want 8 to 9 percent of your cash for the privilege of joining their mutual fund. You might also remember that they intend to use your money to make money for themselves, which is probably their main concern.

At this time of year the hockey season is nearing its end, and it seems like a good time to hand a bouquet to all the people who work so hard during the winter organizing and running the hockey teams and leagues. These people very seldom receive any thanks for the large amount of effort they put out. There are too many of these good people in our communities to mention them all by name, but one fellow who has been at it for a long time is Mr. Jack Gair of the Killam Indians. He has been with the boys for so long that when must be close to ten years now, and has devoted many many hours to hockey each winter This is typical of a few in every town who work with players who are just starting to skate, all the way up the age ladder to senior hockey. Next time you have a beef, you might stop to think first, when was the last time you did something to help.

An old man was lecturing his grand-daughter — "I never see a blush on a girl's face anymore, in my day it was very different." The young girl replied, "Why, Grandad, what did you say to them?"

"THERE'S OUR BIGGEST PROBLEM."

Legislature Opens

(By John Werren)

The newest thing about the Throne Speech opening the third session of the 15th Alberta Legislature was the man who read it. Lt.-Gov Grant MacEwan. He was no new, in fact, that the tailors didn't have time to make a vice-regal uniform to fit his six-foot, three-inch frame, and the former Calgary mayor read the speech garbed in a morning suit.

Although the main items of legislation to be dealt with had already been outlined by Premier Manning the complete speech gave added emphasis to certain areas of activity.

Agriculture came in for more of its normal share of attention. Included are measures to establish an agricultural development trust to increase financial aid to that department at the University. The promised Livestock Purchase Insurance Fund and an extension of the crop insurance plan (including compensation to those who lose animals to carcass hooters) figured prominently in the list of proposed legislation.

Extension of the community pasture program to help residents of marginal and underprivileged areas was promised. And the long-term water conservation program for agriculture, industry and municipalities outlined with a promise that money would be sought to get it started this year.

There was a definitely protective tone to much of the planned legislation One bill, for instance would protect Alberta against "hard sell door-to-door salesmen" It would provide a "cooling off" period before contracts signed with such salesmen became legal.

Another would extend the service available under the Alberta Medical Plan (prescription drugs for instance). An increase in subsidization of medical insurance premiums for low-income groups was also forecast.

And a long-discussed code of human rights will be introduced "to ensure respect for human rights regardless of race, color or creed".

The 15 members and four opposition spokesmen will also be asked to appoint a special committee to enquire into auto insurance. The move is in response to complaints about the 18 percent boost in premiums in less than a year.

The speech also forecast a safety-testing program for motor vehicles and a highway construction program that will provide for a secondary road grid through the province. Pensions, welfare, the university, adoption, Sunday sport, home-owner grant and a variety of other subjects will be dealt with in the session.

x x x x x x

The program appeared to be a thorough one. It answered many of the demands Alberta residents have made in the last few years, and it left the opposition disappointingly little to shout at.

Bill Dickie, Calgary's Liberal M.L.A. suggested revisions in the proposed home-owner assistance to give more help to young couples. And he said the car insurance committee was just a move to get Highways Minister Gordon Taylor off the hook for not tabling action earlier.

He said most of the good ideas were stolen from the Liberals while the government itself did little more than propose increased spending for various departments to carry out the programs.

Tory leader Peter Lougheed was in the spectator's gallery, wishing he were on the floor of the house. But in interviews the next day he said he was disappointed in the government's legislative proposals.

He said the government failed to plan for an automated, industrialized Alberta in which small towns will die in the 1970's if they are not helped.

Other opposition spokesmen described it as a "speech of complacency" and a "milk and honey" speech.

Government and opposition alike agreed that it contained a lot of material. And most of them felt it would take more than the normal seven weeks to deal with.

Items Taken From The Files Of The Community Press

25 YEARS AGO

(From press files Feb. 27, 1941)

On a visit to his old home in Rhode Island, genial Joe Paquet of Killam, was interviewed by the Pawtucket Newspaper and told a glowing story of Alberta and Canada.

A Daysland rink of Tom Cochrane, Jackie Wallis, Duncan McGregor, and Elmer Twitchell, did very well in the Camrose bonspiel last week, winning first in the Merchants, first in Citizens, and the Grand Aggregate

The Sedgewick Junior Hockey Club won the playoffs in the Highway 13 League by defeating Daysland in the finals.

The annual meeting of the ratepayers of the Prairie Park school was held Feb. 14th. Only four ratepayers were present, namely the three members of the local board and the Div board representative.

20 YEARS AGO

(From press files Feb. 21, 1946)

Two Sedgewick rinks accounted for 28% of the prizes won in the Edmonton Bonspiel last week. The first was composed of Ross Cooper of Sedgewick; Billy Ross and his three rosebuds, Barney Semple, Austin Heath, and George Crooks. The second rink had Cliff Butt, Allistair Gordon as building [illegible] and production machinery.

Mr. Sharp hasn't made much of a secret of his dislike for the tax. But its removal at this time would probably cost him more revenue than he can afford, as well as contributing to inflation which has become a major Canadian problem again.

The Finance Minister may keep all taxes where they are in a stand-pat budget which would probably wind up in deficit. This is nothing new — it has been a decade since the Federal books were in the black.

Or if he wants to start out his career as Finance Minister in the black, Mr. Sharp could increase taxes. It wouldn't be a popular move but there isn't much likelihood that any party will bring on another general election so soon after the indecisive Nov. 8 vote.

Although the increase in Federal spending was big enough, it has been outdistanced again this year by the jump in provincial and municipal spending.

Between them, the three levels of Government in Canada take one third of all the dollars earned

* MACDUFF REPORT

Higher and Higher

OTTAWA—The high cost of Government means getting higher and higher.

This was the main message when the Pearson Government tabled its spending plans for the coming fiscal year.

When everything is counted, it looks as though 1966-67 may be a ten billion dollar year for Canada's national government.

Whatever efforts Finance Minister Sharp has made to curb spending, the inexorable upward push of costs has been too much for him. In the fiscal year starting April Fool's Day, costs will be up all along the line.

About the only decreases shown in the spending estimates are "phantom" reductions resulting from Quebec's decision to opt out of Federal-Provincial programs.

Although the Federal Government doesn't need to make direct hospital insurance grants to Quebec any more, for example, there's no real advantage in it for Mr. Sharp in his budgetary light-rope walking act.

This is because he loses revenue along with spending. Because it has taken over the hospital insurance program, Quebec has a right to levy an extra 14 per cent of the Federal income tax rate. And Ottawa has withdrawn from the field to that extent.

So Mr. Sharp has the problem of finding about 10 per cent more money than he needed last year if he wants to balance his first budget. This means about 1 billion billion dollars will come partly from the buoyant bounce of tax revenues.

The way tax revenues are running is illustrated by the present fiscal year. In last year's budget, Walter Gordon forecast a deficit of $200 million. Now it looks as though — in spite of [illegible] costs — the budget will be less than $100 million. Revenues will still be bouncing in the coming year but perhaps not quite as much. For one thing, the provinces will be getting a bigger bite out of income tax. And the income tax reduction Mr Gordon granted last year will take its bell effect in the coming fiscal year.

Any hope of tax cuts has pretty well gone out the window. It had been hoped that Mr. Sharp might eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax imposed in 1963 by Mr.

Valley Ski Club Organized

Every winter, Albertans swoop, shovel and sometimes even swear at snow; but, some Albertans simply say, if you can't beat it, ski on it". That with our abundant snowfall and long winter, skiing has become the fastest growing sport and probably the best family sport our country has to offer.

Some enthusiasts are fortunate enough to have mountains but who needs mountains when we have it in this area, have the Battle River Hills! Only 9 miles straight south of Highway 26 from Killam a ski club from Castor has cleared a hill and has erected an 880 foot rope tow and a lodge.

The hill itself, located about a quarter of a mile from the new bridge on the highway has a vertical height of 200 ft. and is cleared for three runs with each slope being 1000 ft. long. Starting at the top is a 65 by 16 foot structure, with snack bar, was built last summer and serves itself the shiver inest the visitor.

The Valley Ski Club is blessed with a number of instructors, instructors who give novice members free lessons and an opportunity to learn to ski properly. The membership fees are very reasonable and are available for the beginner. Secondly, if you can walk, you can ski! At the Valley club, children aged range from 4 years to sixty-four years young, and briefly, all ski equipment sold today is scientifically checked for safety

In conclusion then, if you have nothing to do noon Wednesday, Saturday, or Sunday afternoon between 1 o'clock and 4:30 then take your family out for a drive and join in for a coffee at the snack bar of the Valley Club Ok you! The next time you come out, don't forget your skis'

MacDuff Report

in the country As late as 1952, the government's cut was only a quarter — now it's over two dollars out of every four the citizens to spend as they choose But in recent years even with the growing gross national product hasn't been able to keep ahead of the surge of Government spending.

The only time the bite was deeper was in 1944, at the peak of war spending, when 42 per cent of the GNP went to the government.

But there has been a big change, too, in the pattern of government spending. The wartime peak was almost all Federal and Ottawa retained its commanding position in the early recent years.

But now provincial and municipal spending, added together, have outrun Federal spending and they're pulling ahead all the time

This poses a problem for Mr. Sharp as he tries to make the Federal budget the balance wheel of the economy. But a start has been made on co-ordinating Federal and Provincial spending plans through an annual meeting of finance Ministers and though the tax-structure committee which is threshing out, behind closed doors the fiscal deal for the five next years.

The end of this process may be "Joint budgeting" with the Federal Government sitting down with the provinces to figure out what Canadians want done and where the money is to be found to pay for it.

This would bring some sighs of relief from the taxpayer who sees the present system mainly as a race to see who can dig deepest into his pocket.

SUGAR AND SPICE

by Bill Smiley

THE BALTIMORE ORIOLE

In last week's column, I mentioned that one Hugh had failed to hang a Saturday rendezvous with Kim and me. He was supposed to meet us and come home for a weekend of skiing. When he didn't show up, we didn't worry, thinking he'd become involved elsewhere. He was not.

Tuesday night following, the Senior Tutor of his college phoned, long-distance. Was Hugh at home, Bill? Nobody in his residence had seen him since Friday night. He'd missed a test in Psychology.

How would you go about telling your wife that her first-born is missing? It would have been easier to inform her that I had cancer and three months to live.

There's nothing more fun, on a night in mid-winter, than sitting around with your wife wondering whether your son has eloped, has been kidnapped, has become a bank-, is on a drunk, or is lying dead in a ditch.

Thus speculating, we took turns. She'd be sitting with apprehension. I'd be red with rage. Then we'd turn red and white, simultaneously, she with anger, I with fear.

And while we were thus engaged, do you know where he was? With food and dining, playing a Stairway grand piano, in a swank apartment on Park Avenue, New York City.

Next night, I phoned his roommate Yep, Mr. Smiley, he'd had a card from Hugh. From Greenwich Village. Having a ball. Next stop, Baltimore.

This time the whole family (Kim was in on it too, bearing with excitement,) left one of the finest families of rage and relief we've ever enjoyed.

Suddenly, I had one of those rare flashes of insight that make people who don't know me think I'm a genius. "Baltimore"? I cried. "Alice of Baltimore?"

I reminded the Old Girl that she has a cousin studying at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. She said I was crazy, he wouldn't dare go there, and if he had, Cousin Pat would have phoned.

I insisted. She called, got Cousin Pat and his wife in jig-time. My wife didn't want to sound like a complete moron and ask if Hugh were there. So she asked, gaily, "How is the boy?" (They'd had a baby boy a few months previously.)

Cousin Pat retorted, "Yours or mine?" And the Baltimore Oriole, as he is now known in the family, was in the nut. Almost.

He came on the line. "Hi, Mum. How are you?" Gay as an orioles. Innocent as a novice nun. When his mother was able to talk, she told him, for 20 minutes, how she felt and what he was. Finally, Kim and I wrested the telephone from her, and I spent 45 seconds telling him to be home by the weekend.

He was. Large as life, cheerful as a cherub. During the weekend, when he wasn't sleeping, eating or skiing he regaled us with his tale.

He'd caught the urge to travel late Friday night. Struck off at 3 a.m., in ski jacket and jeans Hitchhiked Canada rides with university students, Negro ladies, hillbillies.

Arrived New York with 20 cents. Went to coffee-house to keep warm. Ordered coffee. Waiter said, "Sixty-five cents." Hugh said, "I've only got 20." Waiter took it. Read French novel and talked to junkies, students and assorted characters all night.

Said part of blood in Times Square for $2.50. Also, later phoned gentleman musician he'd met in his summer job on cruise boat, who had foolishly said, "Any time you're in New York, look me up." This chap and his wife met the ski-clothed bum to jams with warmth, fed him, enjoyed a musical evening together, gave him sleeping quarters, and sent him on his way with $15 cash.

Hitch-hiked to Baltimore. Had pleasant evening with Cousin Pat and wife Sympathetic. Immediate plans to head for Florida and visit with friends of ours, then meander to New Orleans, where he knows a couple of girls he met music camp, but failed to get parents' phone call.

Returned home with $7.86, cash. Disgusted with parents' attitude. After all, he'd sent us a card from New York. (We got it the day before he arrived home.)

He's back at school, but there's still one thing bothering us. Kim can hardly wait to get started on her first trip.

NOW 'EAR THIS! If you want to keep Jack Frost from nipping at your horse's ears, then try a set of ear muffs on him. It'll please any pony . . . and that comes right from the horse's mouth.

Dayland Council To Buy Bulk Propane

DAYLAND—The regular Council meeting for February 7th was held in the Town Office at 7:30 p.m. with six Councillors present. Deputy Mayor Wirth presided due to the absence of Mayor Fyer.

Leakage of the Water Tower and new brooks in the water lines was discussed with Mr. Richardson of Municipal Engineering Services.

Tenders were received from Mutual Propane and Blue Flame Gas Distributors to supply Propane with all their present Propane needs. It was moved that the bid from Mutual Propane be accepted to supply propane to the Town Office, Fire Hall, Water Plant and Community Hall at 10 1/2c per gallon with 2% discount if paid by the 10th day of the following month and that they continue using the same tanks.

Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation requested information as to the possible borrowing needs of the Town for 1966.

The Assessment Department advised that Mr. A. M. Duncan had been appointed assessor for the Town of Dayland for 1966.

Kilman School Division advised their annual ratepayers meeting was set for February 11th at 2:00 p.m.

An agreement as prepared by the Dayland Drainage District allowing the Town of Dayland to dump sewer effluent into the Drainage Ditch was read to Council and referred to the Water and Sewer committee for further study.

Purchase of Fire extinguishers for the Community Hall was discussed and referred to the Fire Dept.

An Ever Present Threat

Although little sod drifting has occurred this fall and winter, field and weather conditions could change very rapidly, says Mayo Alberta Supervisor of Soils, A. W. Goettel. Our most hazardous months, April, May and June are still ahead.

Mr. Goettel recommends checking fields constantly from now on. Any signs of soil movement should be dealt with immediately. During the period between fall and spring, emergency control measures must be adopted.

Emergency measures are based upon three principles, says Mr. Goettel. The first is to provide a protective cover. Small focal points from which the soil is drifted can be protected by spreading straw or manure over the area. To be really effective, this protective measure must be taken as soon as soil movement starts so that the rest of the field is protected.

The second principle involves establishing a cloddy structure on the soil surface. This can be achieved by breaking the frozen soil with a heavy duty cultivator, using chisel points or shanks spaced two to three feet apart.

The third principle of trapping moving soil must be adopted on loose sand or where clods cannot be brought to the surface. This can be done by listing the soil at right angles to the prevailing wind. Listed shovels or duck foot shovels, spaced at three-foot intervals are very satisfactory for this purpose.

Experience has shown, says Mr. Goettel, that soil drifting can be controlled on a field with one or more of the above remedial measures.

DO YOU KNOW!

Concerning the proposed Federal Medicare Scheme:

THAT—all Ottawa offer to the Provincial governments is, when they say if you don't like it you can "opt out", is in giving the Provinces a choice of two methods by which it can obtain Federal financial assistance; but it does not give the province any right to alter the provisions of the Federal Medical Insurance Plan.

THAT—Ottawa requires that the Federal Medicare Plan must be arbitrarily applied to all, must be paid for wholly with public funds, and must be administered exclusively by government or government agencies. If any of these features were altered by the Provinces, the Federal Government would immediately refuse to help finances the cost of the Plan.

THAT—if a Province refuses the Plan, it can only refuse to accept the benefits, it cannot refuse to pay its share of the costs because the extra Federal taxes that will be levied to pay the Federal Share of a national Medicare Plan will be levied on all Canadians.

Austrialian Tour Cut Short; Writers Return To Canada

(By Community Press Foreign Correspondents)

EDITOR'S NOTE— Due to the sudden death of Beverly's father, Mr. Robert Innes, she and George flew home. This is the the last of their letters of their tour, as they will not be returning to Australia.

From Sydney, Australia, we headed down the coastline for Canberra. The traffic was extremely busy as everyone was heading for the beaches. There are also a large number of industrial towns (satellites of Sydney) along the road to add to the confusion. The road was about two miles from the ocean and there were deep valleys on the inside which were made of solid rock cliffs and covered with scrub or smaller trees. Very inhospitable looking Forty miles from Sydney we came to a spot called Sublime Lookout. From here you can get a vista of 100 miles, looking all the way back to Sydney and ahead to Wollongong. You are 1300 feet above the coastline and can see beautiful surfing beaches all the way.

Shortly after you head inland to Canberra (40 miles from the coast) and cross the mountains which at this point are ten miles inland. This is supposed to be the productive land of Australia, but it looks dried, yellow with dead grass and dotted here and there with Eucalyptus trees. These trees are peculiar in that they never shed their leaves but are constantly shedding their bark. We thought everything was so dead because of the drouth but were informed by natives that this area hadn't suffered from drouth and the hills were normal for this time of year.

Canberra is the capital city of Australia and is planned to eventually hold 250,000 people, although it currently has only a population of 35,000. Australians are very proud of their capital area, although we weren't very impressed with it as it now sits. However future plans look impressive, and buildings which are now up look very modern and clean. It is nice in that it is open and airy, not all jammed together as Sydney is.

From Canberra we headed overland to Adelaide. It is interesting to note that Adelaide is straight West of Sydney, although it looks south on the globe. The first day of travelling took us through quite similar country as we had seen the day before. Teleparatures were now hovering around the 100 degree mark with a very hot, dry wind blowing. We only drove 180 miles and about two o'clock decided we had better stop for the day. Our motel wasn't much cooler but with numerous showers and a fan blowing we managed to survive. A highlight of our day was seeing a Kangaroo eating peaches from a farmer's garden.

We have noticed so far that although roads are narrow (no shoulders) they are quite straight and direct. This was a pleasant change from New Zealand where they seemed to wander at will.

Motels are peculiar in that they are rented on a bed and breakfast basis. Breakfast, which you order the night before, is brought in to you and you eat in bed. Kitchen facilities as we know them are nonexistent. Rates are reasonable, considering this is the tourist season, and cost about $10.00 for two with breakfast included.

The next morning we decided to get up early and avoid the heat. We were on the road by seven a.m. and heading into desert country. We saw great flocks of grey and pink parrots wheeling and turning. They are called Galahs. We tried to get a picture of them but they wouldn't sit still long enough. Heard later they will talk and say hello. Occasionally we would cross a bridge over a dry river bed and signs warning that the road was subject to flooding. That is during heavy rainfall. This is because the land is so flat, as well as the river beds that they just wander at will. In one flood in 1956 a river steamer 11 alleged to have become lost but when the water subsided they found they were 40 miles from the nearest river.

Towns are far apart here and at one stretch there is 110 miles of nothing between towns. No trees, no sheep, no anything except for an occasional sheep and the road stretching straight ahead of you. The soil is very red and sandy looking and grazing sandbush, a thing we managed to see four feet high, which the sheep eat. Temparatures were about 105 and heat heats could be seen two miles each side of the road. At one stage a mirage followed us for ten miles. It was bright shiny looking water, complete with trees on the far side

In spite of the heat we decided against stopping and drove for 400 miles until we got back into civilization. Civilization was called Mildura which is Aborigine for Red Dust or Sore Eyes. It is located on the Murray River which has been dammed and irrigates to provide irrigation. Great orchards of oranges, peaches, pears, appricots, are on either side of the road. It is also the centre of the grape growing industry Some are used to make wines but most are dried and exported as raisins. If you look at the raisins in the bottom you will find that they are probably Australian Sultana. The word raisin here denotes a much larger grape, which when dried, produces a large flat raisin a half inch in diameter and with this same name the commercial as we know it, is called a Sultana, after the grape which it is produced.

We hope in a later letter to tell more of the story of the Murray River. It is a romantic yet harsh story which we are sure you will find interesting.

From Mildura we drove 345 miles down the Murray Valley to Adelaide. Beverly has relatives here and we plan to stay awhile. We have found a "Flat" after much looking. There were many available but also lots of people looking for them. However we found one, and anyone wishing to contact us may write to us, Care of 41 Thomas St. Urley, Adelaide, South Australia.— George and Beverly Davison.

Attending the bride were Misses Shirley Hartberg, maid of honor, Elaine Hirsch, sister of the groom, and Myrna Leader, bridesmaids, who wore identical dark blue floor-length peau de soie gowns. They carried colonial bouquets of white roses.

Ron Bergersen was Jay White and flower girl, Sandra Screen, who wore a short pastel blue organza frock, a blue bandeau of flowers in her hair, and carried a nosegay of white and pink roses. Maurice Hartberg and David Bakken lit the candelabras.

The best man was Merlyn Hirsch, brother of the groom, with Dennis Jones and Roger of Camrose as groomsmen. Ushers were Norman Hirsch, brother of the bride, and Dennis Mason of Camrose, cousin of the bride.

A reception was held in the Camrose United Church parlor for approximately 160 guests. The bride's table was centred with a three-tiered wedding cake, baked by her mother and decorated by a friend, Mrs. Evelyn Hunt of Camrose. Ralph Sorensen of Killam proposed the toast to the bride, to which the groom very ably responded, and master of ceremonies was Walter Bartnicki of Killam. Mrs. Marie Bergersen, sister-in-law of the bride, was in charge of the guest book.

For her going-away ensemble the bride chose a jade green double-knit suit, white accessories, black shoes, and a corsage of roses.

After a brief honeymoon, the couple took up residence in Coronation, where the groom is employed.

Don't Overwater House Plants

Most problems experienced with house plants at this time of year are due to over-watering, says P. D. McCalla, Supervisor of Horticulture with the Alberta Department of Agriculture.

He points out that many people erroneously believe that providing the plants with more water will overcome problems which are actually caused by low humidity, excess heat and lack of light during the winter months.

Mr. McCalla advises watering house plants about once and certainly not more tan twice a week. He says the best way to water them is to put the plant pots in a pan of water and let the water soak upwards through the soil until it reaches the surface.

Putting flowering plants in a southern window may help to make them more healthy, says Mr. McCalla, but drafty windows should always be avoided. Supplementing the natural light may also help. Foliage plants will do well under fluorescent lighting but flowering plants need both flourescent and incandescent light The recommended temperature for house plants is about 70 degrees in the day time and about 60 degrees at night.

Weekly Devotion

"Faith if it hath not works is dead being by itself." Jas. 2:17.

Our age calls for two realities which must be so pronounced that our present generation will be totally affected, yes conquered. Truly we must be concerned with to-morrow and its generation, but more than ever NOW is the hour for concern for today's age.

One of the realities we need is a real faith in God. Not just beliefs but living, proven faith. One that makes God as real to our own hearts, as if we can reach out and touch Him. A faith that transforms us, that possesses us and of which we are obsessed. We don't need a "shy faith" but a down-to-earth, everyday, practical faith which can be the experience of the worker, farmer, professional man, housewife, youth and even children. One that proves and testifies that God IS and that He cares and that He is indispensable to all of us. A heavenly faith that is earthly good.

Then we need an involved Christianity. It is so easy to pray and preach in our comfortable buildings and ignore or condemn people and conditions. We as Christians must go out there and prove to sinners that there is mercy and forgiveness and a better way of life through Christ, for we have proven it so. We must show men how to live and face the daily pressures, problems and realities of life and yet find true joy by making God our partner, for we have proven this so.

Truly we may not have "pat" answers to all questions, but God does have a solution, for again and again we have proven this so.

Christianity is a culture of living faith that works, and a working faith that lives in and through every aspect of daily life.

A real faith in God and an involved Christianity are our present imperatives. — Rev. Ray Kashal, Lougheed Church of the Nazarene.

Baptist Church

Several from the church attended the Interdenominational Young Couples meeting at Forestburg on Monday night.

Rev. Dennis Johnson, of Forestburg, presented the devotion at the regular Wednesday night prayer and Bible study service. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and family will soon be leaving for Killam where he will be the associate pastor of the Ebenezer Baptist Church. A short time of lunch and fellowship in the lower auditorium followed, at which time the vice-chairman presented them with a remembrance gift from the church.

A more modern heating system to the parlor room and Sunday School rooms was installed this week at the church.

Rev. Sipe spoke at the Sunday services. Considerable time was spent enjoying the great hymns of the church.

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK:

It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. — Matthew 4:10

By Miss Irene Eby, Your District Home Economist

Sixteenth in a series on Money Management

The Homemakers

Up to now in this series on Money Management you may feel that I have suggested quite a bit of paper work. But in order for you to see how you stand financially, whether you are drawing up your budget, the baby room and Sunday School rooms was installed this week at the church, developing your wardrobe plan or deciding how you are going to furnish or re-decorate your home, you need to use lots of paper, pencils and erasers. I find that this is the clearest way to go about planning what I need and when I can afford it.

Your Spending Plan

A list of the items you have circled on your wearing guide will be your basis for clothing purchases during the next season or year. Estimate the cost of these items by studying catalogues and advertisements or by visiting stores. If charges for clothing services (laundry or dry cleaning, repair, rental, storage or insurance) will be paid for with money in the clothing budget, place them on your list.

Add all estimated costs together. If the total does not fit into the amount planned for clothes, re-examine your list to see which items will be necessary soon and which items could be purchased later. Consider reducing costs by making certain garments, alterations and repairs at home.

If yours is a family clothing plan, total the lists of each family member. Check the grand total against the amount allowed for clothing in the overall budget. Decide as a group which items are most urgent, which will be paid for out of the family clothing allowance and which each person will be responsible for out of his regular allowance.

A chart for your spending plan is a wise thing to make.

The headings for the column would be:

1. Clothing items or services.
2. Estimated costs.
3. Dates of payment.
4. Actual costs.

At the top of your chart write down the amount that you are allowing yourself or your family.

Organizing a plan on paper will help you keep track of items purchased, money spent and money available for spending. At first, written plans may seem a bother, but they gradually accustom you to mental planning. This may be all that is necessary when you have become skilled in managing clothing dollars.

Free half of the total offerings for the year was divided and sent to Rev. and Mrs. Raymond Larson of Island Lake, Manitoba and Bethany Home for children at Wetaskiwin.

The devotional period was a discussion dealing with Problems In A Christian Home with Children and Parents.

The meeting of Feb. 14th, with 8 couples present, from Killam, Alliance, Sedgewick and Forestburg. A quiz was given in that each person had to act out a song or hymn to which the remaining group had to guess

It was decided that the next meeting will be held on March 14th and the place of meeting will be given in the local papers.

A panel discussion of "What Effect Does Man's Intelligence in the Space Age have to do with his Relationship to God" was enjoyed by all. Pastor Dennis Johnson closed the devotional period with scripture reading from 2 Timothy, chapters 3 and 4, and prayer.

HOG PRICES AND MARKET OUTLOOK

Hog prices in Canada are expected to continue at relatively high levels for at least 6 months, inspected slaughter is expected to range from 6 to 11 per cent below last year's over the current January to July period.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports the number of hogs on farms on December 1, 1965, at 5,198,000, down 8 per cent from the previous year. This was a drop of 16 per cent in western Canada and of only 2 per cent in eastern Canada.

Estimates of sows farrowing in the last six months of 1965 were 6 per cent less than in the corresponding period in 1964. Sows bred to farrow in the current December to February period are estimated by DBS at 351,000 or 20 per cent more than in the 1964-65 period.

In the same DBS survey, farmers' reports of intentions to farrow in the spring of 1966 were 10 per cent above those of last spring.

On the basis of past relationships between DBS estimates of long numbers, farrowing intentions, and subsequent hog gradings, marketings in the last six months are expected to average 137,600 head per week or 7 per cent more than in the last half of 1965.

In view of the prospective supply situation and the firm market prevailing in the United States, it seems evident that hog prices will be firm into next fall. Durning January 1966, Grade A hogs dressed at Toronto averaged $42.87 cwt., or $15.35 per cwt. more than in January, 1965

THE RED X Means TIME TO RENEW

1966 — FIFTY-EIGHTH YEAR — 1966 SEDGEWICK, ALBERTA, THURSDAY, MARCH 3RD, 1966 Volume 56 — Number 42

Local Students Included In '66 Youth Program

Last year the Centennial Commission of the Federal Government, in co-operation with the Alberta Department of Education, instituted a program wherein units of students were sent to provinces other than their own to not only see other parts of this great Dominion, but to meet and associate with young people from parts of Canada. The Killam Inspectorate made application at provide a unit of 36 students in the program, but was rejected because of the lateness of their application.

Mr. Bruce has informed the Community Press that the Killam Inspectorate has been included in the 1966 program, and that a unit of 36 students from the division will visit another province later this year. Details are not yet available, but persons units from Alberta will visit other parts of Canada, probably in July and August.

The basic purpose of the Youth Travel scheme is to provide an opportunity for young Canadians to travel to parts of Canada far from their homes, to assist the enrichment of the land we live in, and to bring the geography of Canada alive to them. It is hoped the scheme will be a better understanding between the peoples of the various regions of the country, by introducing them to the political and educational institutions of Canada and the various aspects of its cultural life.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY TO BE FORMED

SEDGEWICK—There has been a recent upsurge of interest here for the formation of an Historical Society, with a view to preserve as much of the local history of the district as possible. There is a feeling that much of this history is being lost, or at least not being kept to public attention.

With this in mind, action has been started to form an Historical Society with an objective of creating a Centennial Museum in the Village. To start the project on its way, the Board of Trade has taken the initiative and decided to "take up the option" on the Log Hall North of town which will be the home of the Museum. The Billiards Log hall was offered to the community some months ago but action on the matter never seemed to get all the ground. Work has already started on getting the log hall in condition to be moved to town, and a site has been selected on the Recreational Centre grounds where it will be easily available to the public.

A meeting is planned for the near future and it is hoped that interested persons will attend and offer their suggestions for further procedure.

It is felt that there are numerous articles, etc. in the district which could become of interest to the present and future generations, which could be housed in such a museum. The thanks of the district goes to the former members of the Sons Of Norway Lodge still residing here, for the offer of the building.

Killam Indians Win First Game Of Playoff Series

KILLAM— The Killam Indians won their first game of the Provincial Playoff series with Marwayne on Sunday last, coming out on top with a score of 6 to 3. The game was played at Marwayne.

The Indians had previously scalped the Viking squad in the playoff road quite handily.

Manager Jack Gair informed the Press that the game at Marwayne was a good one, and that the score might have had a different and perhaps sudden ending except for the soberb reasoning of Ev Mayne who played an out-standing game in the net. Jack was also high in his praise of Evve Rombough who came out of the game with a hat trick, scoring three of Killam's goals.

The Marwane Club visits Killam tonight (Thursday, March 3rd) in the second game of the round, and Jack asks hockey fans to turn out if they want to see a real hockey game. Game time is 8:30.

Education Week At Killam Public School

Education Week 1966 is to be observed from March 6—13. The cross-Canada theme is "Education —Gateway to Progress" while Alberta has chosen the sub-theme "Changing Education for changing Times."

In keeping with this theme, the staff of the Killam Public School is making a special effort to acquaint the parents with the new Mathematics program in grades one to seven. This will be an opportunity for parents to come and hear the teachers outline the program. Sufficient time will be given for questions to be answered. On Monday, March 7, at 7:00 p.m., 7:45 p.m., and at 9:30 p.m. respectively the teachers of grades one, two, and three will discuss the program for their grade. On Tuesday, at 7:00 p.m. and 7:45 p.m. the grade four and five programs will be similarly dealt with, while on Wednesday, at 7:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. the grade six and seven programs will be discussed.

Parents are urged to attend as many sessions as they wish. The staff hopes that you will take this opportunity to learn about the New Mathematics program. The success of this venture can be determined only by the numbers that turn out.

TWO HAT TRICKS—Brain Gauvreau who last week scored two hat tricks (six goals) to bring his team from behind to win the first round of the Provincial playoffs. Brian is playing coach of the Killam Indians.

Those who attended from here were Ida Isacker, Mrs. Cawsans and Mr. Chevraux of Killam; Mrs. Douglas Tweedy, Mrs. Frank Hoop and Mr. Melvin Backen, all from Sedgewick. There was also two carloads of Lougheedites.

BABY SITTING SCHOOL GIVING TRAINING

SEDGEWICK— With 37 students enrolled in the Baby-Sitting Course which opened on February 22nd at the Sedgewick Public School Library, it looks like the district will have no shortage of trained baby sitters in the future.

The first lesson covered the history of baby sitting, and the topics discussed were, what the employer expects, what the baby sitter expects, what the member of the sitter expects: should you have friends in while sitting? Are you expected to do housework? What is the child the Fidos? Use of the TV and telephone, etc.

The next session was on March 1st, with Mrs. Hilker, Public Health Nurse, speaking on Child Care. There was also a film, "The Terrible Two's and Trusting Three's with related topics discussed.

The next three sessions will cover: March 8th, First Aid, with the speaker being Ernest Charman, along with a film "Pulse of Life." On March 15th the topic will be Fire, with the speaker being Grant Charman, along with a film "Fire is your Problem." On March 22nd, "Safety in the Home" will be featured, with Mrs. A. Edwards as speaker, along with a film, " Toss Thy's Poison"

Alberta Safety Council has completed an examination which will be given at the end of the course, and while there is no set age limit for the course, the graduation cards can only be issued to those who are 12 years of age and over.

The Klassies are providing this course free of charge as a community service Parents are also very welcome to attend any of the sessions. Yesterday's child that needs a sitter, is today's baby, today's employer of a Sitter is tomorrow's parent of a Sitter; and the Sitters themselves will soon have their own children to be sat for.

Stamps Two Up In Final Series

Hardisty Stampeders have taken a commanding two game lead in the finals of the Battle River Hockey League.

Last Friday night in the first game at Hardisty Stampeders defeated the Wainwright Commandoes by a score of 5 to 3 in a game that seemed to go from one end to her it went on. Miller was again outstanding in final for the Stamps and Bob Lowthard were pushing the play all through the game which kept the pressure on the Commandoes and kept them from getting well organized.

Monday night the Stamps travelled to Wainwright and in a hard game of the series and from all reports it carried right on from Friday night and was a hard hitting, rough and tumble affair. Hardisty was again victorious, this time by a score of 3 to 1, which gives them a dominant position in a best of seven series. The Stampeders will have to continue to play good hockey to get the two more wins needed for the championship, but they now have Wainwright at a disadvantage.

HUMANITIES ARE VERY IMPORTANT

To develop the capacity for re-education and even "de-education", Dr. J. H. Keith, President of Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada said students emerging from university into business should be trained and have experience in not only strictly technical skills but also in the humanities. They also should learn "how to learn".

Keeping Abreast!

Although Canada, to all intents and purposes, is an independent nation free to conduct her own affairs as she sees fit, she is nontheless a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. As such she probably has some fraternal obligations to other members and perhaps more especially to England, the founder and mother of the Commonwealth. It is this tie with the "Motherland" that is causing some embarrassment to not a few Canadians who are concerned with the growing imbalance of trade between Canada and England. Our exports to the United Kingdom now exceed $1 billion a year and is about double our imports. Our exports have been steadily climbing while imports have actually declined, in value. There have been complaints from London about this situation, as well as our rates of duty and customs evaluation. The feeling is that Canada has not been playing fair. However a British business director, Sheffield White has come out and said that the real problem stems from Britain's businessmen who are remarkably mired in the outmoded methods of the past.

There is probably more truth than poetry in the above statement, for in the past years England has chewed on more self-dilfusion than any nation can be expected to swallow without acute indigestion. The country's economic situation today does not lend to a very large endorsement of the continuing opinion that Britain is best. There is too much hard-core competition in what is really good three days in the world for any country to rest content in past achievements.

No country today can economically afford to tolerate a debilitating willingness to go along with things good, bad or as they are, nor can it follow an apathetic acceptance of shoddy merchandise, second-rate workmanship and slip-shod service. There must be a passion for improvement, and a sense of urgency, step-up in salesmanship and no stifling of enterprise.

That the problem is not England's alone is indicated by the growing world competition that Canada is facing today in markets from such countries as Japan, France, West Germany and the United States. Canada likewise must put forth a greater effort to find out what the export market needs and wants. We must make it the way our customers want it; we must sell it at their terms more than on our own; and we must not fail in delivery and service. We must cope with competition and not be comfortable in our cartel mind. We cannot afford to be comfortable with high prices and high profits and let the sales take care of themselves.

Canada, The Hockey World?

Indignation is running rampant across Canada against the moguls of the national hockey league. All the dither seems to centre on the fact that the expansion of the league leaves Canada just where she is at the moment with two teams, Toronto and Montreal. Canada has been most shabbily treated, so they say, and something should be done about it. Among suggestions are that young players should not be signed until they are 18 years of age, or at the age of discretion, so to speak. What difference this makes we fail to understand for Canada boys are the same as those of anywhere else when it comes to sports. They will sign with the team that offers them the best deal and where they see the most opportunity. They want to play hockey. Otherwise they wouldn't be in the business. They will sign at 16, 17 or 18 if the opportunity is presented.

Canada is indignant. Then why have we failed to keep pace with the times. Why have we only two or three arenas capable of housing a National League club on a paying basis? Why is Edmonton, for instance, still playing hockey in an arena that is as outmoded as Noah's Ark? Why? If Canada is the home of hockey, can we be beaten at the game in world competition? Simply because other countries have seen the light and gone ahead a lot faster than we have. The hockey light in Canada has gotten pretty dim and until we get up off our knees and trim the wick the light will get no brighter.

Politics and Cynicism!

There should be some consternation in Canada today in view of the fact that in spite of the popular view in our welfare state, poverty is not only widespread, but is increasing. We have assumed in our affluent society that state directed re-distribution of wealth has left us with a society of financial equality in which the only poor are the aged.

The welfare state in Canada fails to cope with the poverty problem and the blame lies mostly in the cynicism of politics. In the opening days of our 27th Parliament, NDP leader Douglas proposed a universal old age pension to be immediately raised to $100 payable at age 65 —patently impossible since it would cost the public another $855 million a year in taxes. Another NDP member, Grace MacInnis, according to Hansard, said that the government should pay a "suitable and adequate" wage to all mothers, an idea that could cost millions. In both cases the aim was to help some in need, it is true, but only by the impossibly extravagant course of paying the same welfare benefits to all.

We have enough of this sort of thing now, where we feel that in all fairness we must give to all in order to help those who really need. A real example of this idea is the old age pension where the millionaire shares equally with pauper. Any kind of welfare has an original purpose of assisting the needy, the handicapped, yes and even the unwilling. It never was intended in its originality to make the affluent more so.

ABOUT MOST ANYTHING

by A.C.B.

I've always enjoyed stories of people who lose out because they think they're too good for the common man. Now comes this story all the way from Norway. Seems a young Norwegian sailor, still in his overalls and rubber boots, walked into a showroom and said he wanted to buy 11 cars if he had the model. The salesmen refused to talk and chased him out. The sailor went directly across the street to a rival dealer and purchased the 6 cars, and paid cash, a total of 300,000 kroner or about $70,000. He represented the crew of a trawler just back from a record herring catch which netted each crew member $10,000. Sixteen of them had decided to buy new cars and to do it all at once to get the best deal. It just proves again that it never pays to look down on the man in overalls.

My congratulations to Mr. Cliff Smallwood, M. P., for this constituency, for the speech he made in the House of Commons on February 16th. Mr. Smallwood had recently made a trip to the West Coast by car and find out what was the holdup in the movement of the grain, and in his speech was reporting to Parliament. I will quote one sentence from Mr. Smallwood's speech as reported in Hansard, which seems to sum of his findings. "If the Minister wants to find out the cause of the holdup in wheat shipments I can tell him it is due to the C.P.R's. actions in Vancouver".

While speaking of Mr. Smallwood, I noted in the February 9th Hansard that he had been named to serve on the committee concerned with Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Throne Speech Debate

(By John Warren)

It was typical week of throne speech debates. Everybody had a kick at the cat and the topics ranged from Sunday sport to drinking drivers to aid for drought areas and pollution of the Bow River.

Long heralded human rights bill was introduced. It was described as "a recourse for abuses to the mind and soul through bigotry, prejudice and discrimination." Hardly anyone questions the intent of the legislation. And, hardly anyone seemed to know the day after it was introduced, just how it would be applied or how much good it might do.

It was one of more than 20 bills that hit the floor of the assembly last week. Premier Manning has indicated there will be more than 100 pieces of legislation introduced at the current session —most of them after the free expression of ideas ends next Thursday.

But while the real meat of the session is in legislation, the most interesting part is undoubtedly in the preliminary debate. During the two weeks that follow the reading of the throne speech each MLA has a chance to put in a pitch for his constituents, get a few personal gripes off his chest and throw an idea or two into the pot for other members to chew on.

Ezell Montgomery from Peace River used his turn to declare that the federal mix-up over aid to district farmers was "one of most flagrant cases of political back-passing and side-stepping" he had seen. He suggested that the federal minister of agriculture, J. J. Greene, was just "the messenger boy" who brought word from Ottawa that no assistance would be given.

And incidentally, during the debate, the agriculture minister Harry Strom wrote to Ottawa for permission to table all correspondence between the provincial and federal governments on the matter.

Highways Minister Gordon Taylor also took a little time to criticize the federal government

In his case it was for failing to help pay the cost of paving the Calgary-Banff highway. He pointed out that it's part of the Trans-Canada route and, as such, deserves some consideration from Ottawa.

Romeo Lamothe put in a pitch on behalf of farmers in the Bonnyville area who have had four consecutive crop failures (the same number as their Peace River counterparts).

And Spirit River's A. O. Flintoft called for more provincial financial help throughout the north. He said home steaders today really haven't got a chance and that some changes had better be made soon before the whole area becomes a "rural slum."

John Landeryou put on his usual outstanding oratorical display — and wound up appealing for a third Alberta university campus in his home town of Lethbridge.

Edgar Gerhart took his turn to say something about national parks. He urged that steps be taken to bring Banff and Jasper under the provincial department of lands and forests. He contended, if it can be done for Quebec "to keep them quiet" then why can't it be done for Alberta.

As we said at the out set, if any word describes the Throne speech debate it's "variety."

Probably the most unexpected, and futile, action in the whole week's debate came when Mike Maccagno (Lab - Lac La Biche) put a non-confidence motion before the house He contended that the speech mentioned simple majority plebiscites only for Sunday sport, ignoring fluoridation and daylight saving time. His sidekick from Calgary, Bill Dickie, seconded the motion and drew Premier Manning's ire in being it. The subject wound up with Mr. Manning's assurance that all three points would be covered in the proposed legislation on plebiscites.

The motion was handily defeated (50-5) and the premier didn't even bother to vote on it.

By defeating the Palmer quartet from Calgary in two straight games, Billy Ross and his rink from Sedgewick won the Alberta Curling Championship and the right to represent Alberta at the Dominion playdowns at Saskatoon in March.

Believe it or not, if you can. Down at Lougheed they've got and called a baseball meeting already.

Killam Lady curlers have really been showing up the men this winter. Latest to win was Mrs. Ed Fee and her rink, they took 4th in the Grand Challenge at Forestburg last week.

A rink shipped by Ralph Storbakken won the Grand Aggregate at the Elks Spiel in Irma

When the storm let up on Saturday a number of farmers are reported to have showed up in Killam to stock up with food before the blow resumed. They immediately headed home, there was no time for socializing.

* MACDUFF REPORT

Labour's Biggest Problem

OTTAWA —Union workers in Quebec have been victimized dead to the siren calls of separatists agitators. The separatists themselves have from time to time deplored their failure to appeal to the ordinary, working class French-Canadian.

This does not mean however, that Quebec trade unions don't want to have their own specially-adapted organizations. In the field of labour, as in politics and culture, there is a burning Quebec desire to resist domination by English-speaking majority groups, and to develop home-grown structures.

This is part of the background to the open conflict that has broken out between the Canadian Labour Congress and the Quebec-based Confederation of National Trade Unions.

On the surface, it is an unequal contest. The CLC, with more than 1,200,000 members, is the central labour body for Canada. The CNTU has about 180,000 members, nearly all of them in Quebec, and fewer than the CLC has in Quebec.

But the CNTU is aggressive, militant, ambitious, and is growing rapidly, partly because of its unabashed raids on membership of Quebec unions affiliated with the CLC.

It has the CLC on the defensive, just as the Quebec Government has the Federal Government on the defensive. The parallel is fairly close. Even though the CLC President, Claude Jodoin, is a French-Canadian, his organization is accused of favouring Federal or English interests at the expense of Quebec.

The CNTU, like the Quebec Government, pretends to be the only true voice of Quebec.

Late in February, in the same week, both labour organizations presented briefs to the Federal Government. Some philosophical differences were immediately apparent in the presentations.

The CLC, for example, was concerned about regionalism, decentralization, and favoured a strong central government for Canada.

The CNTU, on the other hand, emphasized decentralization, and was concerned about some aspects of Federal economic policy which appeared to infringe on provincial rights.

Philosophical arguments may be pursued calmly and peaceably. Real fighting doesn't start until a specific issue appears, and it already has

The issue involves 600 CBC staghands in Quebec, who are now represented by the International Alliance of Theatre and Stage Employees (IATSE), a CLC affiliate.

The CNTU canvassed the membership and succeeded in winning a vote as bargaining agent. The trouble began when application for certification was made to the Federal Labour Relations Board.

The Board turned down the application, on the grounds that the CBC, and other national companies, should deal with employees uniformly across the country.

There are four union members on the Federal Board — three appointed by the CLC, one by the CNTU. It was apparent to the CNTU that whenever it as a union organization was in conflict with the CLC it could not hope to get a favourable decision from the Board.

The CNTU officers made this the chief point in their brief to the Government. They threatened to boycott the Canada Labour Relations Board unless the Board is made bilingual, and unless the effective control by the CLC was removed.

The Federal Labour Department asked time to consider those demands, and further meet-

Canada's population reached an estimated 19,705,000 at October 1, 1965, an increase of 1.2 per cent from one year previously and of 2.0 per cent from the June 1, 1964, census.

MacDuff Report

ings were to be held.

But the CLC was not as diplomatic. Following an executive meeting here, President Jodoin fired off a statement that amounted to a declaration of war on the CNTU.

He accused the Quebec organization of making a deliberate attempt to disrupt labour legislation and collective bargaining practices in Canada. And his criticism went beyond labour matters.

The CNTU, he said, was also trying to "undermine the whole structure of Canada ... with a deliberate attempt to cut the ties that bind people of various provinces and racial backgrounds together as Canadians!"

Mr Jodoin also said that the CLC represented more workers in Quebec than did the CNTU. The CNTU policy would lead to wage differentials among workers.

Workers in Quebec, for example, would rec ive their wages frozen and would be unable to overcome the wage gap with Ontario and other pro vinces which now exists.

He predicted "chaos". For example, a small group of employees in one locality could tie up a trans-continental C.P.R. railway.

"The Canadian Labour Congress will fight this with every means of energy we command," warned Mr Jodoin.

It may be assumed that the CNTU will fight against that.

What does seem clear is that in the makeup of the federal labour relations board there is a bullt-in disadvantage to the CNTU.

On the other hand, abandonment of the hard-won right to bargain on a nation-wide basis would be a big handicap to workers in poorer provinces, including Quebec.

This could be the biggest problem the Federal Labour Department has faced in many years. It has all the aspects of the wider problem in Canada — Canadaisian versus Quebecism, English versus French

Its resolution, certainly, will be no simpler than the resolution of the larger Canadian problem.

SUGAR AND SPICE

IT BRINGS OUT THE BEST

There's nothing like an oldfashioned blizzard to put that cocky creature, man, in his place. We're right in the middle of a four-star dandy at the moment. It's been snowing and blowing for 48 hours, with sublunary results. The world has become a wild, white wilderness. And the people in it have become human beings.

The creature man in his wisdom believes he has tamed nature. He will admit, under quizzing, that he still doesn't know much about himself But he is confident that he has brought the natural world to heel.

Normally, he thinks of nature as something subdued, something to be used for recreation, or bottled at and saying, "Nice, ain't it?"

It takes a roaring batch from that old trollop, Mother Nature, whether it be in the form of a blizzard, a hurricane, an earthquake or a fire, to set him right back on his primitive heels.

And strangely enough, it is only when nature comes up with some kind of a spectacular that man seems to find his scale of immortalities, get down to his basic virtues, and find out once again some lesser lessons the human race go around in ever-diminishing circles.

Ordinarily, the Christian virtues are as easily spotted as the teeth in a hen who is drawing the old-age pension. But when nature gives a vast rumble of laughter at the little fellows, and collapses the facade of creature comforts which are the modern-day fetishes, the old virtues brighten the darkest corner.

Generosity, unselfishness, decency, do-unto-others — all the things to which we pay lip service — suddenly flower when people are getting a good kick in the teeth from old Mother.

When a blizzard is raging, ordinary, miserable, grouchy people regain some of those qualities the pioneers are supposed to have had. People who wouldn't pick up the Queen of England, even if she dropped a sign reading, "Buckingham Palace or bust," suddenly start picking up bitch-kittens.

People who ordinarily wouldn't give you the time of day will stop and shove you out of a snowbank. People who wouldn't buy an apple from a Boy Scout will shovel out old ladies' driveways.

And strangest of all, they smile and grin and chortle while they're doing it.

Not only do they revert to humanity. They return to a certain primitive price in doing battle with the elements.

People who will grumble for hours about a sprinkle of rain that spoils a picnic, turn into giants when the big snow comes. They bump through the drifts. They snort and stamp into work half an hour late, as proud as though they'd just crossed the Sahara, single-handed, without water. They die in their hundreds, from grins on their faces, clutching their snow-shovels.

I speak from experience. This morning, my neighbor, with whom I exchange a carefully amiable greeting about every six months, had managed to smash his truck through the three-foot drift in his drive. And there he was with the smashed nut, grinning like a gargoyle, motor running, to give us a drive to work. And he wasn't grinning one-up-manship. He was being a good neighbor.

God to work, and found that one chap had driven though the storm for four-and-a-half hours to make it on time. He was all-wyed, unshaven, and something of a hero. But perhaps the first time in his life.

I hate to suggest it, in case old Mother N. is listening, but we should need a few more blizzards, earthquakes, holocausts and hurricanes. They work a lot better than nationally advertised Brotherhood Weeks.

FORMER SEDGEWICK BOY TO BRING TEAMS TO SEDGEWICK

SEDGEWICK — Arrangements have been completed with Shim Fialow of Edmonton to bring down two teams from the city to play against the teams from Sedgewick. Shim, former Sedgewick resident, coaches one of these teams in Edmonton He has the club entered in the playoff trial and it looking for some good warm-up games. The local clubs will be "heeled up" for the encounters and interest is running pretty high in the two games.

Saturday, March 5th is the big day. The place is the Sedgewick Rec Centre. Two Eastam teams will square off at 2:30 p.m., to be followed by two Midget teams at 7:00 p.m

Sham thinks he's got two pretty good squads put together, and a certain Mr Hampshire has the same opinion of the local aggregations. In fact he's betting Sham can't "spell it off". We'll see. But you better plan to see this thing for yourself It should be worth it.

Mrs. George Moffat, President of the Alberta Conference, U.C.W., from Calgary, in her address using the theme "Christian Women in Today's World", called upon the women of the church for "more flexibility and less rigidity." She said that many Christian women failed to realize the U.C.W. is part of the structure of the United Church of Canada, and admonished the meeting that they are obligated to read the newspapers and become involved in the issues of the day.

A Memorial Service, commemorating those members of this Presbyterial U.C.W. who had passed away during the year, and the Installation Service for the new officers, conducted by the Rev. Warren, completed a very interesting and informative meeting.

ALKILI SMITH AND HIS SPUDS?

When we lived in Southern Alberta in the year of 1917 we became acquainted with a man by the name of "Smith." There were several families by that name living in that district—so this was dubbed "Alkili Smith"

There was good reason for this —as he and his family lived on a quarter section of really badly—alkilized Alkili soil. In dry years his bunkings—which sat on a bit of high ground—were almost surrounded by dried-out sloughs. These sloughs were so polluted with alkili —that when the water dried up—the house and wee barn had the appearance of a small island sitting out on frozen ponds.

We had to drive past their place on our way to town and actually we found these several alkili sloughs really fantastic looking

It had not been very many years before this time that small herds of buffalo roamed these plains. It was assumed these buffalo seeing water away out in the middle of the ponds (or sloughs)—which had not completely dried up—yet—would start out to get a drink and presumably go "Walker" in the cool water. The ground out to the edge of these sloughs—although dried up—was still soggy—an easy trap into which these huge animals could sink and be completely mired—most of them dying before they did get out.

Thus, one could see the bleached buffalo bones around the edges of the sloughs before you were within maybe a half mile or more of the ponds.

One would wonder how a person could make a living on a place such as this. One day as we were driving by—we stopped to chat with Mr. Smith—who was plowing on a little patch of ground in the yard.

THE SKIING NUN. Sister Maria Terezia of St. Ann's Academy in New Westminster, B.C., is organizing ski trips for resident students to Mount Seymour. The sister was an experienced skier before entering her order seven years ago. She has permission from her superiors to ski in conventional skiing garb, but she finds her habit more comfortable.

Incidentally, he was plowing with a most anti-quated—looking plow pulled by a pair of oxen. However, he was turning over the sod—and that was the main thing. After viewing for a while—we asked him how on the world he ever managed to make enough even for the bare necessaries of life, on such alkili soil

We happened to glance toward the shack just then—and there were youngsters every where one looked. There were two or three at the one window—a couple half hiding behind the Mother's skirts—she was standing in the door-way—and could see two or more little tousled heads sticking around the corner of the shack.

"How many children have you"? I asked.

"Well, now, we have eleven right at the present time—but there should be another in a month or—maybe even another set of twins" he added boastfully.

"But HOW do you manage on just a quarter section of land such as this"? asked my Husband.

Well now—neighbor — you might be surprised", answered Mr. Smith.

"But" — he continued —" This here land grows finest spuds in Western Canada—barrin' none. I burried a lot of money and bought a few pails of registered potatoe—seed last year—the first year I was here. Those spuds grew like mad—right here in this alkili soil—they was real beauties—too. So I writ to Eatons to send out a buyer—he said that hull cahoodle to him—jest kept out some for us to eat—'n of course enough for this year's seed".

"That was last year", he continued. "I'm tellin' you—neighbor—if nothing happens 'N I have as good a crop as last year—for a few years We'll be settin' on top of the world". Imagine such optomism amidst such surroundings

During that summer we kept our eyes on Alkili Smith's potatoe patch —and evidently—he had not exaggerated one bit. Again the buyer from Eaton's came out—Mr. Smith had put in a much larger patch—and, after examining several hills at random he offered Alkili Smith a lump sum for the whole three acres—agreeing to send out men to dig and bag them—as well.

One day Alkli Smith had been to town in a dilapidated old buggy drawn by an ancient horse which he had recently acquired. The day had been hot and sultry, and, as the afternoon wore on—clouds began to bank up in the south-west, as he was hurrying home—trying to beat the storm.

He had just turned into his yard when a bolt of lightning struck a pole just as he was abreast of it—killing Alkli Smith instantly.

Poor Mrs. Smith — it was a tragic ending to the dreams she had had of a better home and living conditions.
